

The Wisdom of the East Series

EDITED BY

L. CRANMER BYNG

Dr. S. A. KAPADIA

“ A LUTE OF JADE

BY THE SAME AUTHOR

(WISDOM OF THE EAST SERIES)

A FEAST OF LANTERNS

3s 6d net

ODES TO CONFUCIUS

2s 6d net

FIRST EDITION	.	.	March 1909
SECOND EDITION	.	.	January 1911
Reprinted	.	.	June 1913
Reprinted	.	.	March 1915
Reprinted	.	.	January 1917
Reprinted	.	.	September 1918
Reprinted	.	.	January 1926

ALL RIGHTS RESERVED

WISDOM OF THE EAST

A LUTE OF JADE

BEING SELECTIONS FROM THE CLASSICAL POETS OF CHINA

RENDERED WITH AN INTRODUCTION
BY L. CRANMER BYNG

AUTHOR OF "THE GIGAS OF CONFUCIUS"

With lutes of gold and lutes of jade

Li Po

LONDON

J. C. MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET, W

CONTENTS

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION	9
The Ancient Ballads	9
Poetry before the T'angs	12
The Poets of the T'ang Dynasty	14
A Poets' Emperor	18
Chinese Verse Form	22
The Influence of Religion on Chinese Poetry	23
THE ODES OF CONFUCIUS	29
CH'U YÜAN	32
The Land of Exile	32
WANG SENG-YU	35
CH'EN T'U ANO	36
SUNG CHIN WEN	38
KAO-SHUN	40
Impressions of a Traveller	40
Desolation	41
MEKO HAO-JAN	43
The Lost One	43
A Friend Expected	44
CH'ANG CH'EN	46
A Night on the Mountain	46

	PAGE
TS'EN-TS'AN	48
A Dream of Spring	48
TU FU	50
The Little Rain	52
A Night of Song	53
The Recruiting Sergeant	54
Chants of Autumn	55
LI PO	57
To the City of Nan-king	58
Memories with the Dusk Return	59
An Emperor's Love	60
On the Banks of Jo-yeh	61
Thoughts in a Tranquil Night	61
The Guild of Good-fellowship	62
Under the Moon	63
Drifting	63
WANG CH'ANG-LING	65
The Song of the Nenuphars	65
Tears in the Spring	66
CHANG CHIH-HO	67
A World Apart	67
CHANG JO-HU	68
T'UNG HAN-CHING	71
The Celestial Weaver	71
PO CHU-I	73
The Late Girl	75
The Never-ending Wrong	79
The River and the Leaf	89
Lake Shang	90
The Ruined Home	90

CONTENTS

7

	PAGE
A Palace Story	92
Peaceful Old Age	92
Sleeplessness	93
The Grass	94
Autumn across the Frontier	94
The Flower Fair	95
The Penalties of Rank	96
The Island of Pines	97
Springtide	97
The Ancient Wind	98
 LI HUA	100
An Old Battle-field	100
 SUI K'UO T'U	103
Return of Spring	105
The Colour of Life	105
Set Free	106
Fascination	106
Tranquil Repose	107
The Poet's Vision	108
Despondent	108
Embroideries	109
Concentration	109
Motion	110
 OU YANG HSIO OF LU KING	111
Autumn	111
At the Graveyard	113
 APPENDIX	115

EDITORIAL NOTE

THE object of the editors of this series is a very definite one. They desire above all things that, in their humble way, these books shall be the ambassadors of good-will and understanding between East and West, the old world of Thought, and the new of Action. In this endeavour, and in their own sphere, they are but followers of the highest example in the land. They are confident that a deeper knowledge of the great ideals and lofty philosophy of Oriental thought may help to a revival of that true spirit of Charity which neither despises nor fears the nations of another creed and colour.

L CRANMER-BYNG.
S A. KAPADIA.

NORTHBROOK SOCIETY,
21, CROMWELL ROAD,
KENSINGTON, S.W.

A LUTE OF JADE

INTRODUCTION

THE ANCIENT BALLADS

A LITTLE under three hundred years from A.D. 618 to 906 the period of the T'ang dynasty and the great age of Chinese poetry had come and gone. Far back in the twilight of history at least 1700 years before Christ the Chinese people sang their songs of kings and feudal princes good or bad, of husbandry or now and then songs with the more personal note of simple joys and sorrows. All things in these Odes collected by Confucius belong to the surface of life: they are the work of those who easily plough light furrows knowing nothing of hidden gold. Only at rare moments of exaltation or despair do we hear the lyrical cry rising above the monotone of dreamlike content. Even the magnificent onthrust at the beginning of this book in which the unhappy woman compares her heart to a dying moon, is prefaced by vague complaint

My brothers, although they support me not,
Are angry if I speak of my sadness

My sadness is so great,
Nearly all are jealous of me,
Many calumnies attack me,
And scolding spares me not Yet what harm have I done ?
I can show a clear conscience

Yes, the conscience is clear and the song is clear, and so these little streams flow on, shining in the clear dawn of a golden past to which all poets and philosophers to come will turn with wistful eyes. These early ballads of the Chinese differ in feeling from almost all the ballad literature of the world. They are ballads of peace, while those of other nations are so often war-songs and the remembrances of brave deeds. Many of them are sung to a refrain. More especially is this the case with those whose lines breathe sadness, where the refrain comes like a sigh at the end of a regret.

Cold from the spring the waters pass
Over the waving pampas grass,
All night long in dream I lie,
Ah me ! ah me ! to awake and sigh—
Sigh for the City of Chow.

Cold from its source the stream meanders
Darkly down through the olanders,
All night long in dream I lie
Ah me! ah me! to awake and sigh—
Sigh for the City of Chow

In another place the refrain urges and importunes it is time for flight

Cold and keen the north wind blows, Silent falls the shroud of snows. —
You who gave me your heart,
Let us join hands and depart!
Is this a time for delay?
Now while we may
Let us away

Only the lonely fox is red
Black but the crow flight overhead
You who gave me your heart—
The chariot creaks to depart.
Is this a time for delay?
Now while we may
Let us away

Perhaps these Odes may best be compared with the little craftless figures in an early age of pottery when the fragrance of the soil yet lingered about the rough clay. The maker of the song was a poet and knew it not. The maker of the bowl was an artist and knew it not. You will get no finish from either—the lines are often blurred, the design but half insilled and yet the effect is not martistic. It has been well said that greatness is but another name for interpretation ; and in so far as these nameless workmen of old interpreted themselves and 'the times in which they lived, they have attained enduring greatness.

POETRY BEFORE THE T'ANGS

Following on the Odes, we have much written in the same style, more often than not by women, or songs possibly written to be sung by them, always in a minor key, fraught with sadness, yet full of quiet resignation and pathos.

It is necessary to mention in passing the celebrated Ch'u Yuan (fourth cent B C), minister and kinsman of a petty kinglet under the Chou dynasty, whose Li Sao, literally translated Falling into Trouble, is partly autobiography and partly imagination. His death by drowning gave rise to the great Dragon-boat Festival, which was originally a solemn annual search for the body of the poet.

Soon a great national dynasty arrives whose Emperors are often patrons of literature and occasionally poets as well. The House of Han (200 B C.-A D 200) has left its mark upon the Empire of China, whose people of to-day still call themselves "Sons of Han". There were Emperors beloved of literary men, Emperors beloved of the people, builders of long waterways and glittering palaces and one great conqueror the Emperor Wu Ti of almost legendary fame. This was an age of preparation and development of new forces. Under the Han Buddhism first began to flourish. The effect is seen in the poetry of the time especially towards the closing years of this dynasty. The minds of poets sought refuge in the ideal world from the illusions of the senses.

The third century A.D. saw the birth of what was probably the first literary club ever known—the Seven Sages of the Bamboo Grove. This little coterie of friends was composed of seven famous men who possessed many talents in common being poets and musicians alchemists philosophers, and mostly hard drinkers as well. Their poetry, however is scarcely memorable. Only one great name stands between them and the poets of the Tang dynasty—the name of Tao Ch'ien (A.D. 365-427) whose exquisite allegory "The Peach Blossom Fountain" is quoted by Professor Giles in his Chinese Literature. The philosophy of this ancient poet appears to have been that of Horace: Carpe diem!

Ah how short a time it is that we are here!
Why then not set our hearts at rest ceasing to trouble whether we remain or go? What boots it to wear out the soul with anxious thoughts?
I want not wealth, I want not power—Heaven is beyond my hopes. Then let me stroll through the bright hours as they pass, in my garden among my flowers, or I will mount the hill and sing my song, or weave my verse beside the limpid brook. Thus will I work out my allotted span, content with the appointments of Fate, my spirit free from care."¹ For him enjoyment and scarcely happiness is the thing. And although many of his word-pictures are not lacking in charm or colour, they have but little significance beyond them. They are essentially the art works of an older school than that of the Seven Sages. But we must have due regard for them, for they only miss greatness by a little, and remind us of the faint threnodies that stir in the throats of bird musicians upon the dawn.

14 POETRY BEFORE THE T'ANGS

THE POETS OF THE T'ANG DYNASTY

At last the golden age of Chinese poetry is at hand. Call the roll of these three hundred eventful years, and all the great masters of song will answer you. This is an age of professional poets, whom emperors and statesmen delight to honour. With the Chinese, verse-making has always been a second nature. It is one of the accomplishments which no man of education would be found lacking. Colonel Cheng-Ki-Tong, in his delightful book The Chinese Painted by

¹ Giles, Chinese Literature, p. 130

THE POETS OF THE TANG DYNASTY 15

Themselves, says "Poetry has been in China as in Greece the language of the gods. It was poetry that inculcated laws and maxims. It was by the harmony of its lines that traditions were handed down at a time when memory had to supply the place of writing and it was the first language of wisdom and of inspiration." It has been above all the recreation of statesmen and great officials, a means of escape from the weariness of public life and the burden of ruling. A study of the interminable biographies of Chinese poets and men of letters would reveal but a few professional poets, men whose lives were wholly devoted to their art, and of these few the Tang dynasty can claim nearly all. Yet strange as it may seem, this matters but little when the quality of Chinese poetry is considered. The great men of the age were at once servants of duty and the lords of life. To them official routine and the responsibilities of the state were burdens to be borne along the highway with periods of rest and intimate re-union with nature to cheer the travellers. When the heavy load was laid aside, song rose naturally from the lips. Subtly connecting the arts, they were at once painters and poets, musicians and singers. And because they were philosophers and seekers after the beauty that underlies the form of things, they made the picture express its own significance and every song find echo in the souls of those that heard You will find no tedium of repetition in all their poetry, no thin vein of thought beaten out over endless pages The following extract from an ancient treatise on the art of poetry called Ming-Chung sets forth most clearly certain ideals to be pursued.

16 THE POETS OF THE T'ANG DYNASTY

"To make a good poem, the subject must be interesting, and treated in an attractive manner, genius must shine throughout the whole, and be supported by a graceful, brilliant, and sublime style The poet ought to traverse, with a rapid flight, the lofty regions of philosophy, without deviating from the narrow way of truth . . . Good taste will only pardon such digressions as bring him towards his end, and show it from a more striking point of view

"Disappointment must attend him, if he speaks without speaking to the purpose, or without describing things with that fire, with that force, and with that energy which present them to the mind as a painting does to the eyes Bold thought, untiring imagination, softness and harmony, make a true poem

"One must begin with grandeur, paint everything expressed, soften the shades of those which are of least importance, collect all into one point of view, and carry the reader thither with a rapid flight"

Yet when due respect has been paid to this critic of old time, the fact still remains that concentration and suggestion are the two essentials of Chinese poetry. There is neither Iliad nor Odyssey to be found in the libraries of the Chinese. Indeed a favorite feature of their verse is the "stop short" a poem containing only four lines concerning which another critic has explained that only the words stop while the sense goes on. But what a world of meaning is to be found between four short lines! Often a door is opened a curtain drawn aside, in the halls of romance where the reader may roam at will. With this nation of artists in emotion the taste of the tea is a thing of lesser importance, it is the aroma which remains and delights. The poems of the T'angs are full of this subtle aroma this suggestive compelling fragrance which lingers when the songs have passed away. It is as though the Aeolian harps had caught some stray wind from an unknown world, and brought strange messages from peopled stars.

THE POETS OF THE TANG DYNASTY 17

A deep simplicity touching many hidden springs a profound regard for the noble uses of leisure things which modern critics of life have taught us to despise—these are the technique and the composition and colour of all their work.

Complete surrender to a particular mood until the mood itself surrenders to the artist and afterwards silent ceaseless toil until a form worthy of its expression has been achieved—this is the method of Li Po and his fellows. And as for leisure, it means life with all its possibilities of beauty and romance. The artist is ever saying, "Stay a little while! See, I have captured one moment from eternity." Yet it is only in the East that poetry is truly appreciated, by those to whom leisure to look around them is vital as the air they breathe. This explains the welcome given by Chinese Emperors and Caliphs of Bagdad to all roving minstrels in whose immortality, like flies in amber, they are caught.

18 THE POETS OF THE T'ANG DYNASTY

A POET'S EMPEROR

In the long list of imperial patrons the name of the Emperor Ming Huang of the T'ang dynasty holds the foremost place. History alone would not have immortalized his memory.¹ But romance is nearer to this Emperor's life than history. He was not a great ruler, but an artist stifled in ceremony and lost in statecraft. Yet what Emperor could escape immortality who had Tu Fu and Li Po for contemporaries, Ch'ang-an for his capital, and T'ai Chên of a thousand songs to wife? Poet and sportsman, mystic and man of this world, a great polo player, and the passionate lover of one beautiful woman whose ill-starred fate inspired Po Chu-i, the tenderest of all their singers,² Ming Huang is more to literature than to history Of his life and times the poets are faithful recorders Tu Fu in The Old Man of Shao-Ling leaves us this memory of his peaceful days passed in the capital before the ambition of the Turkic general An Lu shan had driven his master into exile in far Szechuan The poet himself is speaking in the character of a lonely old man wandering slowly down the winding banks of the river Kio

Alas! he murmured 'they are closed the thousand palace doors mirrored in clear cool waters The young willows and the rushes renewing with the year—for whom will they now grow green?'

Once in the garden of the South waved the standard of the Emperor

All that nature yields was there vying with the rarest hues

"There lived she whom the love of the first of men had made first among women

She who rode in the imperial chariot in the excursions on sunny days

Before the chariot flashed the bright escort of maidens armed with bow and arrow

Mounted upon white steeds which pawed the ground champing their golden bits

Gaily they raised their heads, launching their arrows into the clouds

And, laughing uttered joyous cries when a bird fell victim to their skill.'

In the city of Ch'ang-an, with its triple rows of glittering walls with their tall towers uprising at intervals, its seven royal palaces all girdled with gardens, its wonderful Yen tower nine stories high, encased in marble, the drum towers and bell towers, the canals and lakes with their floating theatres, dwelt Ming Huang and T'ai-Chên. Within the royal park on the borders of the lake stood a little pavilion round whose balcony crept jasmine and magnolia branches scenting the air. Just underneath flamed a tangle of peonies in bloom, leaning down to the calm blue waters. Here in the evening the favourite reclined, watching the peonies vie with the sunset, beyond. Here the Emperor sent his minister for Li Po, and here the great lyrist set her mortal beauty to glow from the scented, flower-haunted balustrade immortally through the twilights yet to come.

What matter if the snow
Blot out the garden? She shall still recline
Upon the scented balustrade and glow
With spring that thrills her warm blood into wine

Once, and once alone, the artist in Ming Huang was merged in the Emperor. In that supreme crisis of the empire and a human soul, when the mutinous soldiers were thronging about the royal tent and clamouring for the blood of the favourite it was the Emperor who sent her forth—

My pale,
Between tall avenues of spears to die.

Policy the bane of artists demanded it and so for the sake of a thousand issues and a common front to the common foe he placed the love of his life upon the altar of his patriotism and went, a broken hearted man into the long exile. From that moment the Emperor died. History ceases to take interest in the crownless wanderer. His return to the place of tragedy and on to the capital where the deserted palace awaits him with its memories his endless seeking for the soul of his beloved, her discovery by the priest of Tao in that island of P'eng Lai where—gaily coloured towers

Rise up like rainbow clouds, and many gentle
And beautiful Immortals pass their days in peace, her message to her lover with its splendid triumphant note of faith foretelling their reunion at the last—in fine the story of their love with the grave between them—is due to the genius of Po Chū I. And to all poets coming after these two lovers have been types of romantic and mystic love between man and woman. Through them the symbols of the mandarin duck and drake, the one-winged birds, the tree whose boughs are interwoven, are revealed. They are the earthly counterparts of the heavenly lovers, the Cow-herd and the Spinning-maid in the constellations of Lyra and Aquila. To them Chinese poetry owes some of its finest inspirations, and at least two of its greatest singers, Tu Fu and Li Po.

CHINESE VERSE FORM

In passing it is necessary to refer to the structure of Chinese verse, which, difficult as it is to grasp and differing in particulars from our European ideas of technique, has considerable interest for the student of verse form and construction.

The favourite metres of the T'ang poets were in lines of five or seven syllables. There is no fixed rule as regards the length of a poem, but, generally speaking, they were composed of four, eight, twelve, or sixteen lines. Only the even lines rhyme, except in the four-line or stop-short poem, when the first line often rhymes with the second and fourth, curiously recalling the Rubaiyat form of the Persian poets. There is also a break or cæsure which in five-syllable verses falls after the second syllable and in seven-syllable verses after the fourth. The Chinese also make use of two kinds of tone in their poetry, the Ping or even, and the Tsze or oblique

The even tone has two variations differing from each other only in pitch the oblique tone has three variations known as "Rising Slaking and Entering" In a seven-syllable verse the odd syllables can have any tone as regards the even syllables, when the second syllable is even then the fourth is oblique and the sixth even Furthermore lines two and three four and five six and seven have the same tones on the even syllables The origin of the Chinese tone is not a poetical one but is undoubtedly due to the necessity of having some distinguishing method of accentuation in a language which only contains about four hundred different sounds

THE INFLUENCE OF RELIGION ON CHINESE POETRY

To Confucius as has been already stated is due that groundwork of Chinese poetry—the Odes But the master gave his fellow countrymen an ethical system based upon sound common sense and a deep knowledge of their customs and characteristics There is little in the Confucian classics to inspire a poet and we must turn to Buddhism and the mystical philosophy of Lao Tzū for any source of spiritual inspiration from which the poets have drawn Buddhism and Taoism are sisters Their parents are self-observance and the Law Both are quietists,

24 THE INFLUENCE OF RELIGION

yet in this respect they differ, that the former is the grey quietist, the latter the pearl. The neutral tint is better adapted to the sister in whose eyes all things are Maya—illusion. The shimmer of pearl belongs of right to her whose soul reflects the colour and quiet radiance of a thousand dreams. Compassion urged the one, the love of harmony led the other. How near they were akin! how far apart they have wandered! Yet there has always been this essential difference between them, that while the Buddhist regards the senses as windows looking out upon unreality and mirage, to the Taoist they are doors through which the freed soul rushes to mingle with the colours and tones and contours of the universe. Both Buddha and Lao Tzŭ are poets, one listening to the rhythm of infinite sorrow, one to the rhythm of infinite joy. Neither knows anything of reward at the hands of men or angels. The teaching of the Semitic religions, "Do good to others that you may benefit at their hands," does not occur in their pages, nor any hints of sensuous delights hereafter. In all the great Buddhist poems, of which the Shu Hsing Tsan Ching is the best example, there is the same deep sadness, the haunting sorrow of doom. To look on beautiful things is only to feel more poignantly the passing of bright days, and the time when the petals must leave the rose. The form of desire hides within it the seeds of decay.

In this epic of which I have spoken Buddha sees the lovely and virtuous Lady Aruna coming to greet him says to his disciples

'This woman is indeed exceedingly beautiful, able to fascinate the minds of the religious, so than keep your recollections straight! Let wisdom keep your mind in subjection! Better fall into the fierce tiger's mouth or under the sharp knife of the executioner than to dwell with a woman. A woman is anxious to exhibit her form and shape whether walking standing sitting, or even asleep even when represented as a picture she desires most of all to set off the blandishments of her beauty and thus rob men of their steadfast heart! How then ought you to guard yourselves? By regarding her tears and her smiles as enemies her stooping form her hanging arms and all her disentangled hair as coils designed to entrap man's heart. Then how much more should you suspect her studied amorous beauty! when she displays her dainty outline her richly ornamented form and chatters gaily with the foolish man! Ah then! what perturbation and what evil thoughts not seeing underneath the sorrows of impermanence the impurity the unreality! Considering these as the reality all desires die out.'

How different is this meeting of beauty and

26 THE INFLUENCE OF RELIGION

Buddhism from the meeting of Ssu-K'ung T'u, the great Taoist poet, with an unknown girl!

Gathering the water-plants
From the wild luxuriance of spring,
Away in the depth of a wild valley
Anon, I see a lovely girl.
With green leaves the peach-trees are loaded,
The breeze blows gently along the stream,
Willows shade the winding path,
Darting orioles collect in groups.
Eagerly I press forward
As the reality grows upon me. . . .
'Tis the eternal theme,
Which, though old, is ever new.¹

Here is reality emerging from the unreal, spring renewing, love and beauty triumphant over death and decay. The girl is the central type and symbol. From her laughing eyes a thousand dead women look out once more on spring, through her poets find their inspiration. Beauty is the key that unlocks the secrets of the frozen world, and brings the dead to life again.

The Symbol of Decay !

The Symbol of Immortality !

It is perhaps both. There are times when the grave words of the Dhammapada fall like shadows along the path. "What is life but the flower or the fruit which falls when ripe yet ever fears the untimely frost? Once born there is naught but sorrow, for who is there can escape death? From the first moment of life, the result of passionate love and desire, there is nought but the bodily form transitional as the lightning flash! Yet apart from all transitory passions and the ephemeral results of mortal love the song of the Taoist lover soars unstained untrammelled. Man attains not by himself nor woman by herself but like the one-winged birds of the Chinese legend they must rise together. To be a great lover is to be a great mystic since in the highest conception of mortal beauty that the mind can form there lies always the unattainable the unpossessed suggesting the world of beauty and finality beyond our mortal reach. It is in this power of suggestion that the Chinese poets excel. Asked to differentiate between European and Chinese poetry some critics would perhaps insist upon their particular colour sense in standing the curious fact that where we see blue to them it often appears green and vice versa or the tone theories that make their poems so difficult to understand in fact a learned treatise would be written on these lines to prove that the Chinese poets were not human beings as we understand humanity at all. It is however, not by this method that we can begin to trace the difference between the poets of East and West.

¹ History of Chinese Literature, by Professor Herbert Giles, p 180

28 THE INFLUENCE OF RELIGION

but in the two aspects of life which no amount of comparison can reconcile

To the Chinese such commonplace things as marriage, friendship, and home have an infinitely deeper meaning than can be attached to them by civilisation which practically lives abroad, in the hotels and restaurants and open houses of others, where there is no sanctity of the life within, no shrine set apart for the hidden family re-union, and the cult of the ancestral spirit. To the Western world, life, save for the conventional hour or so set aside on the seventh day, is a thing profane. In the far East the head of every family is a high-priest in the calling of daily life. It is for this reason that a quietism is to be found in Chinese poetry ill appealing to the unrest of our day, and as dissimilar to our ideals of existence as the life of the planets is to that of the dark bodies whirling aimlessly through space.

THE ODES OF CONFUCIUS

1765-585 B.C.

Collected by Confucius about 500 B.C.

SADNESS

THE sun is ever full and bright,
The pale moon waneth night by night.
 Why should this be ?

My heart that once was full of light
Is but a dying moon to-night.

But when I dream of thee apart
I would the dawn might lift my heart,
 O sun, to thee

TRYING TIME

I

A pretty girl at time o' gloaming Hath whispered me to go and meet her Without the city gate

TRYSTING TIME

I love her, but she tarries coming
Shall I return, or stay and greet her ?
I burn, and wait.

II

Truly she charmeth all beholders,
'Tis she hath given me this jewel,
The jade of my delight,
But this red jewel-jade that smoulders,
To my desire doth add more fuel,
New charms to-night.

III

She has gathered with her lily fingers
A lily fair and rare to see
Oh ! sweeter still the fragrance lingers
From the warm hand that gave it me.

THE SOLDIER

I climbed the barren mountain,
And my gaze swept far and wide
For the red-lit eaves of my father's home,
And I fancied that he sighed .
My son has gone for a soldier,
For a soldier night and day ;
But my son is wise, and may yet return,
When the drums have died away.

I climbed the grass-clad mountain
And my gaze swept far and wide
For the rosy lights of a little room Where I thought my mother sighed
My boy has gone for a soldier
He sleeps not day and night,
But my boy is wise and may yet return
Though the dead lie far from sight

I climbed the topmost summit,
And my gaze swept far and wide
For the garden roof where my brother stood,
And I fancied that he sighed
My brother serves as a soldier
With his comrades night and day
But my brother is wise and may yet return,
Though the dead lie far away

CH'U YUAN

FOURTH CENTURY, B C.

A LOYAL minister to the feudal Prince of Ch'ü, towards the close of the Chou dynasty His master having, through disregard of his counsel, been captured by the Ch'in State, Ch'ü Yuan sank into disfavour with his sons, and retired to the hills, where he wrote his famous Li Sao, of which the following is one of the songs He eventually drowned himself in the river Mi-Lo, and in spite of the search made for his body, it was never found The Dragon-boat Festival, held on the fifth day of the fifth moon, was founded in his honour.

THE LAND OF EXILE

Methinks there's a genius Roams in the mountains,
Girdled with ivy
And robed in wisteria, Lips ever smiling,
Of noble demeanour,
Driving the yellow pard,
Tiger-attended,
Couched in a chariot
With banners of cassia,

Cloaked with the orchid
And crowned with azaleas, Culling the perfume
Of sweet flowers he leaves
In the heart a dream-blossom, Memory haunting
But dark is the forest
Where now is my dwelling,
Never the light of day
Reaches its shadow
Thither a perilous
Pathway meanders
Lonely I stand
On the lonelier hill top Cloudland beneath me
And cloudland around me
Softly the wind bloweth Softly the rain falls
Joy like a mist hots
The thoughts of my home out,
There none would honour me,
Fallen from honours
I gather the larkspur
Over the hillside
Blown mid the chaos
Of boulder and belibine
Hating the tyrant
Who made me an ontoast
Who of his leisure
Now spares me no moment

Drinking the mountain spring,
Shading at noon-day
Under the cypress
My limbs from the sun glare
What though he summon me Back to his palace,
I cannot fall
To the level of princes
Now rolls the thunder deep,
Down the cloud valley,
And the gibbons around me
Howl in the long night
The gale through the moaning trees
Fitfully rushes.
Lonely and sleepless
I think of my thankless Master, and vainly would Cradle my sorrow.

WANG SENG-JU

SIXTH CENTURY A.D.

TEARS

HIGH o'er the hill the moon barque steers,
The lantern lights depart Dead springs are stirring in my heart
And there are tears
But that which makes my grief more deep
Is that you know not when I weep

CH'ÊN TZŪ-ANG

A.D. 656-698

FAMOUS for writing that kind of impromptu descriptive verse which the Chinese call "Ying" In temperament he was less Chinese than most of his contemporaries His passionate disposition finally brought him into trouble with the magistrate of his district, who had him cast into prison, where he died at the age of forty-two

Whatever his outward demeanour may have been, his poetry gives us no indication of it, being full of delicate mysticism, almost impossible to reproduce in the English language For this reason I have chosen one of his simpler poems as a specimen

THE LAST REVEL

From silver lamps a thin blue smoke is streaming,
And golden vases 'mid the feast are gleaming,
Now sound the lutes in unison,
Within the gates our lives are one We'll think not of the parting ways
As long as dawn delays.

When in tall trees the dying moonbeams quiver
When floods of fire efface the Silver River, Then comes the hour when I must seek Lo-Yang beyond the furthest peak
But the warm twilight round us twain
Will never rise again.

SUNG CHIH-WÊN

DIED A.D. 710

THE son of a distinguished general, he began his career as attaché to the military advisers of the Emperor. These advisers were always drawn from the literary class, and their duties appear to have been chiefly administrative and diplomatic. Of his life, the less said the better. He became involved in a palace intrigue, and only saved himself by betraying his accomplices. In the end he was banished, and finally put to death by the Emperor's order. It is necessary, however, to dissociate the man from his poetry, and Sung Chih-Wen's poetry often touches a high level of inspiration.

THE COURT OF DREAMS

Rain from the mountains of Kí-Sho Fled swiftly with a tearing breeze,
The sun came radiant down the west,
And greener blushed the valley trees.

I entered through the convent gate:
The abbot bade me welcome there,
And in the court of silent dreams
I lost the thread of worldly care.

That holy man and I were one Beyond the bounds that words can trace
The very flowers were still as we
I heard the lark that hung in space,
And Truth Eternal flashed on me.

KAO-SHIIH

CIRCA A.D. 700

ONE of the most fascinating of all the T'ang poets His life was one long series of romantic adventure At first, a poor youth battling with adversity, then the lover of an actress, whom he followed through the provinces, play-writing for the strolling troupe to which she was attached, the next, secretary to a high personage engaged in a mission to Thibet, then soldier, and finally poet of renown, acquiring with his latter years the fortune and honours denied him in his youth

The chief characteristics of his poetry are intense concentration, a vivid power of impressionism, and a strong leaning in the direction of the occult. Indeed, one of his best-known poems, "The Return to the Mountains," makes mention of the projection of the astral body through space during sleep Many of his poems leave us with a strange sense of horror which is suggested rather than revealed It is always some combination of effects which produces this result, and never a concrete form

IMPRESSIONS OF A TRAVELLER

In a silent, desolate spot,
In the night stone-frozen and clear,
The wanderer's hand on the sail
Is gripped by the fingers of fear.

He looketh afar o'er the waves
 Wind ruffled and deep and green,
 And the mantle of Autumn lies
 Over wood and hill and ravine

'Tis Autumn!—time of decay,
 And the dead leaves' 'wildering flight,
 And the mantle of Autumn lies
 On the wanderer's soul to-night!

DESOLATION

I

There was a King of Liang¹—a king of wondrous ' might—
 Who kept an open palace, where music charmed the night—

II

Since he was Lord of Liang a thousand years have flown
 And of the towers he builded yon ruin stands alone

¹ Strictly speaking, the pronunciation of all words such as Liang, Kiang, etc., is nearer one syllable than two. For purposes of euphony however without which the lines would be harsh and unpoetical, I have invariably made two syllables of them.

KAO-SHIEH

III

There reigns a heavy silence ; gaunt weed through windows pry,
And down the streets of Liang old echoes, wailing, die.

MENG HAO JAN

A.D. 689-740

One of the few literary men of the day whose later life was devoted entirely to literature. He was the inseparable friend of the famous Buddhist poet and doctor Wang Wei. He spent the first forty years of his life in acquiring knowledge, but having failed to obtain his doctor's degree, he returned to the quiet hills of his native province and dedicated his remaining years to composition. Most of his poems, other than certain political satire, which drew on him the Emperor's wrath, are full of subtle sadness and fragrant regret, reminding one of pot-pourri in some deep blue porcelain bowl.

THE LOST ONE

The red gleam o'er the mountains
Goes wavering from sight,
And the quiet moon enhances
The loveliness of night.

I open wide my casement
To breathe the rain-cooled air
And mingle with the moonlight
The dark waves of my hair

The night wind tells me secrets
Of lotus lilies blue ,
And hour by hour the willows
Shake down the chiming dew.

I fain would take the zither,
By some stray fancy led ,
But there are none to hear me,
And who can charm the dead ?

So all my day-dreams follow
The bird that leaves the nest ;
And in the night I gather
The lost one to my breast.

A FRIEND EXPECTED

Over the chain of giant peaks
The great red sun goes down,
And in the stealthy floods of night
The distant valleys drown.

Yon moon that cleaves the gloomy pines
Has freshness in her train ,
Low wind, faint stream, and waterfall
Haunt me with their refrain.

The tired woodman seeks his cot
That twinkles up the hill,
And sleep has touched the wanderers
That sang the twilight still.

To-night—ah! beauty of to-night
I need my friend to praise
So take the lute to lure him on Through the fragrant, dew lit ways

CH'ANG CH'EN

CIRCA A D 720

ONE of the great philosopher-poets of the Taoist school His life was spent far from the court and away from the sounds of civil warfare, in the endeavour to set himself in harmony with the universe—to become, in fact, like an Æolian harp through which all the chords of nature might sweep at will How far he attained the end desired may be seen in his work, which is penetrated by a sense of profound beauty, recalling the quiet twilight upon the mountain side, which he so well describes

A NIGHT ON THE MOUNTAIN

I sat upon the mountain-side and watched
A tiny barque that skimmed across the lake, Drifting, like human destiny upon
A world of hidden peril, then she sailed
From out my ken, and mingled with the blue
Of skies unfathomed, while the great round sun
Weakened towards the waves.

The whole expanse

Suddenly in the half light of the dusk
 Glimmered and waned The last rays of the sun
 Lit but the tops of trees and mountain peaks
 With tarnished glory and the water's sheen
 Once blue and bright grow lustreless and soon
 A welter of red clouds alone betrayed
 The passing of the sun The scattered isles Uprose black looming o'er the tranquil deeps, Where the reflected heavens wanly showed A lingering gleam Already wood and hill Sank in obscurity The river marge Seemed but a broken line to failing sight

Night is at hand, the night winds fret afar
 The North winds moan The waterfowl are gone
 To cover o'er the sand-dunes, dawn alone
 Shall call them from the sedges Some bright star

Mirrors her charms upon the silver shoal
 And I have taken the lute my only friend
 The vibrant chords beneath my fingers blent,
 They sob awhile then as they slip control

Immortal memories awake and the dead years
 Through deathless voices answer to my strings
 Till from the brink of Time's untarnished springs
 The melting night recalls me with her tears

TS'ÊN-TS'AN

CIRCA A.D. 750

OF his life we know little, save that he was the intimate friend of the great poet Tu Fu, and came of a noble family. He was, moreover, Censor under the Emperor Su Tsung (A.D. 756-762), and rose to be Governor of Chia-chou. What remains of his verse mostly takes the form of quatrains, yet for originality of thought, wealth of imagery and style, they have seldom been excelled. He was a master of metre, and contributed certain modifications to the laws of Chinese prosody which exist to the present day.

A DREAM OF SPRING

Last night within my chamber's gloom some vague light breath of Spring Came wandering and whispering, and bade my soul take wing

A hundred moonlit miles away the Chiang crept to sea,
O keeper of my heart, I came by Chiang's ford to thee.

It lingered but a moment's space that dream of Spring and died
Yet as my head the pillows pressed, my soul had found thy side

Oh! Chiang Nan a hundred miles yet in a moment's space
I've flown away to Chiang Nan and touched a dreaming face

TU FU

A D 712-770

Tu Fu, whom his countrymen called the God of Verse, was born in the province of Hu-Kuang, and this was his portrait from contemporaries

He was tall and slightly built, yet robust with finely chiselled features, his manners were exquisite, and his appearance distinguished. He came of a literary family, and, as he says of himself, from his seventh to his fortieth year study and letters occupied all his available time. At the age of twenty-seven he came to the capital with his fame in front of him, and there Li Po the poet and Ts'ên Ts'an became his friends, and Ming Huang his patron. He obtained a post at Court somewhat similar to that of Master of Ceremonies in our own Court. Yet the poet had few sympathies outside the artistic life. He was so unworldly and so little of a courtier that when the new Emperor Su Tsung returned in triumph to the capital and appointed him Imperial Censor, he fulfilled his new duties by telling his majesty the whole unpalatable truth in a manner strangely free from ornamental apology, and was promptly rewarded with the exile of a provincial governorship. But Tu Fu was no man of affairs, and knew it. On the day of his public installation he took off his insignia of office before the astonished notables, and, laying them one by one on the table, made them a profound reverence, and quietly withdrew.

Like his friend Li Po he became a homeless wanderer but, unlike him, he concealed his brilliant name obtaining food and patronage for his delightful nameless self alone and not for his reputation's sake. Finally he was discovered by the military governor of the province of Szechuan who applied on his behalf for the post of Restorer of Ancient Monuments in the district the one congenial appointment of his life. For six years he kept his post; then trouble in the shape of rebel hordes burst once more upon the province and again he became an exile. The last act of this eventful life took place in his native district: some local mandarin gave a great banquet in honour of the distinguished poet whom he had rescued half-drowned and famishing from the ruined shrine by the shore where the waters had cast him up. The wine-cup brimmed a sin and again, food was piled up in front of the honoured guest and the attendant who waited was Death. The end was swift sudden, and pitiful. The guest died from the banquet of his rescuer.

Of all poets Tu Fu is the best in craftmanship. It is interesting to add that he was a painter as well, and the friend of painters notably the soldier-artist, Hsiang Tu to whom he dedicates a poem. Possibly it is to this faculty that he owes his superb technique. He seeks after simplicity and its effects as a diver seeks for sunken gold. In his poem called "The Little Rain," which I have (perhaps somewhat rashly) attempted, there is all the graciousness of fine rain falling upon sullen furrows which charms the world into spring. "The Recruiting Sergeant" has the touch of grim desolation which belongs inevitably to a country plundered of its men and swept with the ruinous winds of rebellion.

Li Po gives us Watteau like pictures of life in Chang-an before the flight of the Emperor. The younger poet paints with the brush of Verestchagin the realism and horrors of civil war. In most of Tu Fu's work there is an underlying sadness which appears continually sometimes in the vein that runs throughout the poem, sometimes at the conclusion, and often at the summing up of all things. Other poets have it, some more, some less, with the exception of those who belong to the purely Taoist school. The reason is that the Chinese poet is haunted. He is haunted by the vast shadow of a past without historians—a past that is legendary, unmapped and unbounded, and yields, therefore, Golcondas and golden lands innumerable to its bold adventurers. He is haunted from out the crumbled palaces of vanished kings, where “in the form of blue flames one sees spirits moving through each dark recess.” He is haunted by the traditional voices of the old masters of his craft, and lastly, more than all, by the dead women and men of his race, the ancestors that count in the making of his composite soul and have their silent say in every action, thought, and impulse of his life.

THE LITTLE RAIN

Oh! she is good, the little rain! and well she knows our need
Who cometh in the time of spring to aid the sun-drawn seed,
She wanders with a friendly wind through silent nights unseen,
The furrows feel her happy tears, and lo! the land is green.

Last night cloud-shadows gloomed the path that winds to my abode,
And the torches of the river-boats like angry meteors glowed,

To-day fresh colours break the soil and butterflies take wing
Down broidered lawns all bright with pearls in the garden of the King

A NIGHT OF SONG

The wind scarce flutters through the leaves,
The young moon hath already gone
And kind and cool the dews descend
The lute-strings wake for night alone

In shadow laps the twinkling streams,
The lilyd marge their waves caress
And the sheer constellations sway
O'er soundless gulfs of nothingness

What cadence charms the poet's ear !
What fire-fly funnies round him swarm !
He dreads the lantern lights may fail
Long ere his thoughts have taken form.

Now gallants tap their two-edged swords
And pride and passion swell amain,
Like red stars flashing through the night
The circling wine-cups brim again

There steals the old sad air of Ou—
 Each calls his latest song to mind ;
 Then white sails taper down the stream,
 While lingering thoughts still look behind.

THE RECRUITING SERGEANT

At sunset in the village of Che-Kao¹
 I sought for shelter, on my heels there trod
 A grim recruiting sergeant, of the kind
 That seize their prey by night. A poor old man Saw—scaled the wall, and vanished Through the gate

An old bent woman hobbled, and she marched
 A pace before him Loudly in his wrath
 The grim recruiter stormed, and bitterly
 She answered “Listen to the voice of her
 Who drags before you. Once I had three sons—Three in the Emperor’s camp. A letter came From one, and—there was one, the others fell
 In the same battle—he alone was left,
 Scarce able from the iron grasp of Death
 To tear his miserable life

Alas

My two dead boys ! for ever and for aye

¹ All words ending in ao are pronounced ow, as in English vow, allow, etc

Death holds them. In our wretched hut remains
 The last of all the men—a little child
 Still at his mother's breast. She cannot flee Since her few tatters scarce suffice to clothe
 Her shrunken limbs

My years are nearly done,
 My strength is well nigh spent yet I will go Readily to the camping-ground. Perchance
 I may be useful for some humble task
 To cook the rice or stir the morning meal.

Night slipped away The clamour and the cries Died down but there was weeping and the sound
 Of stifled moans around me

At the break
 Of dawn I hurried on my road and left
 None but an old and broken man behind.

CHANTS OF AUTUMN

Shorn by the frost with crystal blade,
 The dry leaves scattered, fall at last
 Among the valleys of Wu Chan
 Cold winds of death go wailing past.
 Tumultuous waves of the great river rise
 And seem to storm the skies
 While snow bright peak and prairie mist combine,
 And greyness softens the harsh mountain line

Chrysanthemums unfurl to-day,
To-morrow the last flowers are blown.
I am the barque that chains delay .

My homeward thoughts must sail alone From house to house warm winter robes are spread,

And through the pine-woods red Floats up the sound of the washerman's bat who plies
His hurried task ere the brief noon wanes and dies.

LI PO

A.D. 702-763

THE most famous name in Chinese literature. Born in the province of Szech'uan, Li Po obtained his doctor's degree at the age of twenty and was already known as a brilliant, inspired poet before Ming Huang became his patron in the capital. A suite of rooms overlooking the beautiful gardens of T'eng hsiang T'ing, where the Emperor retired after the routine of the day was assigned to him. Here the poet improvised, whilst Ming Huang himself wrote down the verses that he afterwards set to music, and accompanied while the poet sang. But Li Po with all his enthusiasm for his patron and the delights of the garden life was little of a courtier. When Ming Huang bade the masterful eunuch Kao Li-shih unlace the poet's boots, he gave him a relentless enemy whose malice pursued him, until at length he was glad to beg leave to retire from the court, where he was never at ease and to which he never returned. Troubadour like, he wandered through the provinces, the guest of mandarin and local governor the star of the drinking taverns, the delight and embarrassment of all his hosts. At length a friend of former days, to whom he had attached himself, unhappily involved him in the famous rebellion of An Lu-shan. The poet was seized and thrown into prison. Yet prison doors were ill wardens of his fame, and letters of recall followed closely upon pardon; but death overtook the exile before he could reach the capital, and at the age of sixty his wanderings came to an end.

Li Po was a poet with a sword by his side. He would have ruffled bravely with our Elizabethans, and for a Chinese is strangely warlike in sentiment. How he loves the bravo of Chao with his sabre from the Chinese Sheffield of Wu, "with the surface smooth as ice and dazzling as snow, with his saddle brodered with silver upon his white steed, who when he passes, swift as the wind, may be said to resemble a shooting star!" He compares the frontiersman, who has never so much as opened a book in all his life, yet knows how to follow in the chase, and is skilful, strong, and hardy, with the men of his own profession. "From these intrepid wanderers how different our literary men who grow grey over their books behind a curtained window."

It is harder to write of Li Po than of any other Chinese poet. Po Chu-i has his own distinctive feeling for romance, Tu Fu his minute literary craftsmanship, Ssü-K'ung T'u the delicate aroma of suggestive mysticism, but Li Po is many-sided, and has perhaps more of the world-spirit than all of them. We can imagine this bold, careless, impulsive artist, with his moments of great exaltation and alternate depression, a kind of Chinese Paul Verlaine, with his sensitive mind of a child, always recording impressions as they come. T'ai Chên the beautiful and the grim frontiersman are alike faithfully portrayed. He lives for the moment, and the moment is often wine-flushed like the rosy glow of dawn, or grey and wan as the twilight of a hopeless day.

TO THE CITY OF NAN-KING

Thou that hast seen six kingdoms pass away,
Accept my song and these three cups I drain!
There may be fairer gardens light the plain,
Thine are the dim blue hills more fair than they.

Here Kings of Wu were crowned and overthrown,
Where peaceful grass along the ruin wins
Here—was it yesterday?—the royal Tains Called down the dreams of sunset into stone

One end awaits for all that mortal be Pride and despair shall find a common grave
The Yang tse-kiang renders wave and wave
To mingle with the abysses of the sea

MEMORIES WITH THE DUSK RETURN

The yellow dusk winds round the city wall
The crows are drawn to nest
Silently down the west
They hasten home and from the branches call.
A woman sits and weaves with fingers deft
Her story of the flower lit stream, Threading the jasper gauze in dream
Till like faint smoke it dies and she bareft, Recalls the parting words that died
Under the casement some far eventide
And stays the disappointed loom,
While from the little lonely room
Into the lonely night she peers,
And like the rain unheeded fall her tears.

AN EMPEROR'S LOVE

In all the clouds he sees her light robes trail,
And roses seem beholden to her face ,
O'er scented balustrade the scented gale Blows warm from Spring, and dew-drops form apace.

Her outline on the mountain he can trace,
Now leans she from the tower in moonlight pale.

A flower-girt branch grows sweeter from the dew

The spirit of snow and rain unheeded calls
Who wakes to memory in these palace walls ?
Fei-yen ! ¹—but in the robes an Empress knew.

The most renowned of blossoms, most divine
Of those whose conquering glances overthrow Cities and kingdoms, for his sake combine
And win the ready smiles that ever flow
From royal lips What matter if the snow
Blot out the garden ? She shall still recline
Upon the scented balustrade and glow
With spring that thrills her warm blood into wine.

¹ A delicate compliment to the beautiful T'ai-Chên, of which the meaning is that, as the Emperor Yang-ti of the Sui dynasty elevated his mistress Fei-yen to share with him the throne, so shall T'ai-Chên become the Empress of Ming Huang

ON THE BANKS OF JO-EH

They gather lilies down the stream
A net of willows drooping low
Hides boat from boat and to and fro Sweet whispered confidences seem 'Mid laughing trills to flow

In the green deeps a shaft of gold Limns their elaborate attire
Through silken sleeves the winds aspire Embalmed to stray and growing bold, Swell them to their desire

But who are these the cavaliers
That gleam along the river-side ?
By three by five they prance with pride
Beyond the willow-line that sheers
 Over the trellised tide

A charger neighs, one turns to start,
Crushing the kingcups as he flies
And one pale maiden vainly tries
To hush the tumult in her heart
And veil the secret of her eyes

THOUGHTS IN A TRANQUIL NIGHT

Athwart the bed
I watch the moonbeams cast a trail
So bright so cold, so frail.

That for a space it gleams
Like hoar-frost on the margin of my dreams.
I raise my head,—
The splendid moon I see :
Then droop my head,
And sink to dreams of thee—
My Fatherland, of thee !

THE GUILD OF GOOD-FELLOWSHIP

The universe is but a tenement
Of all things visible Darkness and day .
The passing guests of Time Life slips away,
A dream of little joy and mean content

Ah ! wise the old philosophers who sought
To lengthen their long sunsets among flowers,
By stealing the young night's unsullied hours
And the dim moments with sweet burdens fraught.

And now Spring beckons me with verdant hand,
And Nature's wealth of eloquence doth win
Forth to the fragrant-bowered nectarine,
Where my dear friends abide, a careless band

There meet my gentle, matchless brothers, there
I come, the obscure poet, all unfit
To wear the radiant jewellery of wit,
And in their golden presence cloud the air.

THE GUILD OF GOOD FELLOWSHIP 63

And while the thrill of meeting lingers soon
As the first courtly words the feast is spread While couched on flowers mild wine-cups flashing red,
We drink deep draughts unto The Lady Moon

Then as without the touch of verse divine
There is no outlet for the pent up soul
'Twas ruled that he who quaffed no fancy's bowl Should drain the Golden Valley¹ cups of wine

UNDER THE MOON

Under the crescent moon a faint glow
The washerman's bat resonnds afar
And the autumn breeze sighs tenderly
But my heart has gone to the Tartar war
To bleak Kansuh and the steppes of snow, Calling my husband back to me

DRIFTING

We cannot keep the gold of yesterday
To-day's dun clouds we cannot roll away

¹ i.e. drink three cups of wine, the "Golden Valley" being the name of a garden, the owner of which enforced this penalty among his boon companions (Genie of Chinese Literature, p. 113).

Now the long, wailing flight of geese brings autumn in its train,
So to the view-tower cup in hand to fill and drink again,

And dream of the great singers of the past,
Their fadeless lines of fire and beauty cast
I too have felt the wild-bird thrill of song behind the bars,
But these have brushed the world aside and walked amid the stars

In vain we cleave the torrent's thread with steel,
In vain we drink to drown the grief we feel,
When man's desire with fate doth war this, this avails alone—
To hoist the sail and let the gale and the waters bear us on

WANG CH'ANG LING

CIRCA A.D. 750

THIS poet came from the district of Chiang-ning to the capital, where he obtained his doctor's degree and distinguished himself as a man of letters. For some time he filled a minor post, but was eventually disgraced and exiled to the province of Hunan. When the rebellion of An Lu-shan broke out, he returned to his native place, where he was cruelly murdered by the censor Lu Ch'in hiao. (See Hervey Saint-Denys, Poésies des Thang p. 224 Giles Bio. Dict. p. 8087)

THE SONG OF THE NENUPHARS

Leaves of the Nenuphars and silken skirts the same pale green
On flower and laughing face alike the same rose-tints are seen
Like some blurred tapestry they blend within the lake displayed
You cannot part the leaves from silk, the lily from the maid.
Only when sudden voices swell
Do maidens of their presence tell.

- Here long ago the girls of Su, the darlings of the King,
Dabbled their shining skirts with dew from the gracious blooms of Spring When to the lake's sun-dimpled marge the bright procession wends,
The languid lilies raise their heads as though to greet their friends ,
When down the river-banks they roam,
The white moon-lady leads them home

TEARS IN THE SPRING

Clad in blue silk and bright embroidery
At the first call of Spring the fair young bride,
On whom as yet Sorrow has laid no scar,
Climbs the Kingfisher's Tower Suddenly
She sees the bloom of willows far and wide,
And grieves for him she lent to fame and war.

CHANG CHIH HO

CIRCA A.D. 750

A Taoist philosopher who lived in the time of the Emperor Su Taung and held office under him. For some offence he was exiled, and the royal pardon found him far too occupied to dream of return.

Like so many of the same philosophy he became a lonely wanderer calling himself the "Old Fisherman of the Mists and Waters." Professor Giles (Chinese Literature p. 101) adds the curious statement that "he spent his time in angling but used no bait his object not being to catch fish."

A WORLD APART

The Lady Moon is my lover
My friends are the oceans four
The heavens have roofed me over
And the dawn is my golden door
I would liefer follow the condor
Or the seagull soaring from ken,
Than bury my godhead yonder
In the dust of the whirl of men

CHANG JO-HU

CIRCA A D 800

WHEN heaven reveals her primal stainless blue, Alone within the firmament there burns
The tiny torch of dusk What startled eyes Uplifted from the restless stream first met
The full round glory of the moon! Yon orb
That pales upon the flood of broad Chiang,
When did she first through twilight mists unveil
Her wonders to the world?

Men come and go ,
New generations hunger at the heels
Of those that yield possession Still the moon
Fulfil her phases While the tides of time
Eat out the rocks of empire, and the stars
Of human destiny adown the void
Go glittering to their doom, she changeless sweeps Through all her times and destinies Alas !
The little lives that swarmed beneath the moon,
I cannot count them. This alone I know—
That, wave on wave, the Chiang seeks the sea,
And not a wave returns.

One small white cloud
Threading the vasty vault of heaven recalls
My heart unto her loneliness I sail
Between two banks where heavy boughs enlacc '
Whose verdurous luxuriance wakes once more
My many griefs None know me as I am,
Steering to strange adventure None may tell
If steeped in the same moonlight lies afar
Some dim pavilion where my lady dreams
Of me Ah, happy moon! low lingering moon!
That with soft touch now brightens into jade Lintel and door and when she lifts the blind Floats through the darkened chamber of her sleep

While leagues away my love-winged messages Go flocking home and though they mingle not Our thoughts seek one another In the lilt
Of winds I hear her whisper ' Oh that I Might melt into the moonbeams and with them
Leap through the void, and shed myself with them Upon my lover " Slow the night creeps on Sleep harbours in the little room She dreams—Dreams of a fall o' flowers Alas! young Spring Lies on the threshold of maternity
And still he comes not Still the flowing stream Sweeps on, but the swift torrents of green hours Are locked into the brazen skies between Their widening banks The great deliberate moon

Now leans toward the last resort of night

Gloom of the western waves. She dips her rim, She sinks, she founders in the mist, and still
The stream flows on, and to the insatiate sea Hurries her white-wave flocks innumerable In never-ending tale. On such a night
How many tireless travellers may attain
The happy goal of their desire! So dreams
My lady till the moon goes down, and lo!
A rush of troubled waters floods her soul,
While black forebodings rise from deeps unknown
And the cold trail of fear creeps round her heart.

.

T'UNG HAN CHING

CIRCA A.D. 800

THE CELESTIAL WEAVER

A THING of stone beside Lake Kouon ming
Has for a thousand autumns borne the name Of the Celestial Weaver Like that star
She shines above the waters wondering
At her pale loveliness Unnumbered waves Have brodered with green moss the marble folds

About her feet Tolling eternally
They knock the stone like tireless shuttles plied
Upon a sounding loom.

Her pearly looks
Resemble snow-coils on the mountain top
Her eyebrows arch—the crescent moon. A smile
Lies in the opened lily of her face And since she breathes not being stone the birds

Light on her shoulders, flutter without fear
At her still breast Immovable she stands
Before the shining mirror of her charms
And, gazing on their beauty, lets the years Slip into centuries past her . . .

PO CHÜ I

A.D. 772-846

SEVENTY years old and already a doctor of letters a great future was before him. The life of such a man would seem to be one sure progress from honour to honour. Yet it is to some petty exile some temporary withdrawal of imperial favour that we owe "The Lute Girl," perhaps the most delicate piece of work that has survived the age of the gold T'ang. Certainly the music is the most haunting, suggestive of many-coloured moods with an undertone of sadness and that motive of sympathy between the artist-exiles of the universe which calls the song from the singer and tears from the heart of the man. So exile brought its consolations, the voice and presence of "The Lute Girl," and the eight names of poets who became with Po Chü I the literary community of Hsiang-shan. In China it has always been possible for the artist to live away from the capital. Provincial governors and high officials send for him; all compete for the honour of his presence. Respect, which is the first word of Chinese wisdom according to Confucius, is paid to him. In provincial Europe his very presence would be unknown unless he brought his wife on the high road or stole a neighbour's pig. If his Celestial Majesty hears of the simple life at Hsiang-shan and becomes jealous for his servant. The burden of rule must once more be laid on not too willing shoulders. Chü I is recalled and promoted from province to province.

till eventually, five years before his death, he is made President of the Board of War. Two short poems here rendered—namely, "Peaceful Old Age" and "The Penalties of Rank"—give us a glimpse of the poet in his old age, conscious of decaying powers, glad to be quit of office, and waiting with sublime faith in his Taoist principles to be "one with the pulsings of Eternity."

Po Chü-i is almost nearer to the Western idea of a poet than any other Chinese writer. He was fortunate enough to be born when the great love-tragedy of Ming Huang and T'ai Chen was still fresh in the minds of men. He had the right perspective, being not too near and yet able to see clearly. He had, moreover, the feeling for romance which is so ill-defined in other poets of his country, though strongly evident in Chinese legend and story. He is an example of that higher patriotism rarely met with in Chinese official life which recognises a duty to the Emperor as Father of the national family—a duty too often forgotten in the obligation to the clan and the desire to use power for personal advantage. Passionately devoted to literature, he might, like Li Po and Tu Fu, have set down the seals of office and lived for art alone by the mountain-side of his beloved Hsiangshan. But no one knew better than Po Chü-i that from him that hath much, much shall be expected. The poet ennobled political life, the broader outlook of affairs enriched his poetry and humanised it.

And when some short holiday brought him across the frontier, and the sunlight, breaking out after a noon of rain over the dappled valleys of China, called him home, who shall blame him for lingering awhile amid his forest dreams with his fishing and the chase.

Yet solitude and the picturesque cannot hold him for long, nor even the ardours of the chase. Po Chü-i is above all the poet of human love and sorrow, and beyond all the consoler. Those who profess to find pessimism in the Chinese character must leave him alone. At the end of the great tragedy of "The Never-ending Wrong" a whispered message of hope is borne to the lonely soul beating against the confines of the visible world —

"Tell my lord," she murmured, "to be firm of heart as this gold and enamel; then in heaven or earth below we twain may meet once more."

It is the doctrine of eternal constancy so dimly understood in the Western world, which bids the young wife immolate herself on her husband's tomb rather than marry again, and makes the whole world seem too small for the stricken Emperor with all the youth and beauty of China to command.

THE LUTE GIRL

The following is Po Chü's own preface to his poem:—

When, after ten years of regular service, I was wrongfully dismissed from the Prefecture of the Nine Rivers and the Mastership of the Horse, in the bright autumn of the year I was sent away to Ko-pen Creek's mouth. It was there that I heard, seated in my boat at midnight, the faint tones of a lute. It seemed as though I was listening to the tones of the gongs in the Palace of the Capital. On asking an old man, I learnt that it was the performance of a woman who for many years had cultivated the two talents of music and singing to good effect. In the course of time her beauty faded she humbled her pride and followed her fate by becoming a merchant's wife.

The wine ran out and the songs ceased. My grief was such that I made a few short poems to set to music for singing.

But now perturbed, engulfed, distressed, worn out, I move about the river and lake at my leisure. I have been out of office for two years, but the effect of this man's words is such as to produce a peaceful influence within me.

This evening I feel that I have dismissed all the reproachful thoughts I harboured, and in consequence have made a long poem which I intend to present to the court

By night, beside the river, underneath
The flower-like maple leaves that bloom alone
In autumn's silent revels of decay,
We said farewell. The host, dismounting, sped
The parting guest whose boat rocked under him,
And when the circling stirrup-cup went round,
No light guitar, no lute, was heard again,
But on the heart aglow with wine there fell Beneath the cold bright moon the cold adieu
Of fading friends—when suddenly beyond
The cradled waters stole the lullaby
Of some faint lute, then host forgot to go,
Guest lingered on all, wondering at the spell, Besought the dim enchantress to reveal
Her presence, but the music died and gave No answer, dying Then a boat shot forth
To bring the shy musician to the shore
Cups were refilled and lanterns trimmed again,
And so the festival went on At last,
Slow yielding to their prayers, the stranger came,
Hiding her burning face behind her lute,
And twice her hand essayed the strings, and twice
She faltered in her task, then tenderly,
As for an old sad tale of hopeless years,

With drooping head and fingers deft she poured
Her soul forth into melodies Now slow
The plectrum led to prayer the cloistered chords
Now loudly with the crash of falling rain,
Now soft as the leaf whispering of words
Now loud and soft together as the long Patter of pearls and seed pearls on a dish
Of marble liquid now as from the bush
Warbles the mango bird meandering
Now as the streamlet seawards voiceless now
As the wild torrent in the strangling arms
Of her ice-lover lying motionless
Lulled in a passion far too deep for sound,
Then as the water from the broken vase
Gushes or on the mailed horseman falls
The anvil din of steel as on the silk
The slash of rending so upon the strings
Her plectrum fell

Then silence over us
No sound broke the charmed air The autumn moon
Swam silver o'er the tide as with a sigh
The stranger stirred to go

'I passed, said she

My childhood in the capital my home
Was near the hills A girl of twelve I learnt
The magic of the lute the passionate Blending of lute and voice that drew the souls
Of the great masters to acknowledgment,
And lovely women envious of my face

Bowed at the shrine in secret The young lords Vied for a look's approval One brief song Brought many costly bales Gold ornaments
 And silver pins were smashed and trodden down,
 And blood-red silken skirts were stained with wine
 In oft-times echoing applause And so I laughed my life away from year to year
 While the spring breezes and the autumn moon
 Caressed my careless head Then on a day
 My brother sought the battles in Kansuh ,
 My mother died · nights passed and mornings came,

And with them waned my beauty Now no more
 My doors were thronged , few were the cavaliers That lingered by my side , so I became A trader's wife, the chattel of a slave
 Whose lord was gold, who, parting, little recked
 Of separation and the unhonoured bride
 Since the tenth moon was full my husband went To where the tea-fields ripen I remained,
 To wander in my little lonely boat
 Over the cold bright wave o' nights, and dream
 Of the dead days, the haze of happy days,
 And see them set again in dreams and tears "

.

Already the sweet sorrows of her lute
 Had moved my soul to pity , now these words Pierced me the heart " O lady fair," I cried,
 " We are the vagrants of the world, and need

No ceremony to be friends Last year
I left the Imperial City banished far
To this plague-stricken spot where desolation Broods on from year to heavy year nor lute
Nor love a guitar is heard By marshy bank
Girt with tall yellow reeds and dwarf bamboos
I dwell. Night long and day no stir no sound
Only the lurking cuckoo's blood-stained note
The gibbon's mournful wail Hill songs I have
And village pipes with their discordant twang
But now I listen to thy lute methinks
The gods were parents to thy music Sit
And sing to us again while I engrave Thy story on my tablets! Gratefully (For long she had been standing) the lute girl
Sat down and passed into another song
Sad and so soft a dream unlike the song
Of now ago Then all her hearers wept
In sorrow unrestrained and I the more Weeping until the pale chrysanthemums
Upon my darkened robe were starred with dew

THE NEVER ENDING WRONG

I have already alluded to the story of the Emperor Ming Huang and the lady Yang Kwei fei, or Tai Chên, as she is called, in my introduction. In order that the events which led up to her tragic death may be understood, I have given in front of the poem a short extract from the old Chinese annals translated into French by the Jesuit Father Joseph de Mailla in 1778. The Emperor is fleeing with a small, ill disciplined force before the rebellious general An Lu-shan into the province of Ssüch'uan. So the bald narrative resumes

As the Emperor was followed by a numerous suite, and because time was lacking, the arrangements for so long a journey were found to be insufficient. On their arrival at Ma-wei both officers and men murmured loudly against Yang Kuo-chung,¹ accusing him of having brought all the present evils upon them. The ambassador of the King of Tibet, followed by twenty retainers, seeing the Prime Minister pass, stopped him, and asked for provisions. Then the soldiers cried out that Yang was conspiring with the strangers, and throwing themselves upon him, they cut off his head, which they exposed on a stake to the public gaze. The Emperor, becoming aware of this violence, did not, however, dare to exact punishment. He sent an officer to the chief of those who had slain the Prime Minister, to find out the reason for their deed, he replied that they had done so because Yang was on the point of rebellion. The leader of the revolt even demanded the instant execution of the lady T'ai Chên, as she was the sister of the supposed rebel, Yang. The Emperor, who loved her, desired to prove her innocence by showing that it was impossible for her, living always as she did within the Palace precincts, to be confederate to her brother's plot. His envoy, however, urged him that it was politic, after the events he had witnessed, to sacrifice her, innocent as she was, if he wished to escape from the dangers of (another) revolution. The Emperor, yielding to political necessity, gave her into the hands of the envoy with the order that she should be strangled.

¹ Minister of State, brother to T'ai Chên.

Ennui

Tired of pale languors and the painted smile,
His Majesty the Son of Heaven long time
A slave of beauty ardently desired
The glance that brings an Empire's overthrow

Beauty

From the Yang family a maiden came Glowing to womanhood a rose aflame
Reared in the inner sanctuary apart
Lost to the world restless to the heart
For beauty such as hers was hard to hide
And so when summoned to the monarch's side
Her flashing eye and merry laugh had power
To charm into pure gold the leaden hour
And through the paint and powder of the court
All gathered to the sunshine that she brought.
In spring by the Imperial command
The waters of Hua ch'ing beheld her stand Laving her body in the crystal wave Whose dimpled fount a warmth perennial gave Then when, her girls attending forth she came A reed in motion and a rose in flame
An empire passed into a maid's control
And with her eyes she won a monarch's soul

Revelry

Hair of cloud o'er face of flower
Nodding plumes where she alights,

In the white hibiscus bower
She lingers through the soft spring nights—
Nights too short, though wearing late Till the mimosa days are born Never more affairs of State
Wake them in the early morn
Wine-stained moments on the wing, Moonlit hours go luting by,
She who leads the flight of Spring
Leads the midnight revelry Flawless beauties, thousands three,
Deck the Imperial harem,
Yet the monarch's eyes may see
Only one, and one supreme.
Goddess in a golden hall,
Fairest maids around her gleam,
Wine-fumes of the festival
Daily waft her into dream.
Smiles she, and her sires are lords,
Noble rank her brothers win
Ah, the ominous awards
Showered upon her kith and kin¹
For throughout the land there runs
Thought of peril, thought of fire, Men rejoice not in their sons—
Daughters are their sole desire.
In the gorgeous palaces,
Piercing the grey skies above,

¹ Pronounced hareem.

Music on the languid breeze
 Draws the dreaming world to love
 Song and dance and hands that sway
 The passion of a thousand lyres
 Ever through the live-long day
 And the monarch never tires
 Sudden comes the answer ours
 Loud the fish-skin war-drums roar
 Cease the plaintive rainbow skirt
 Death is drumming at the door

Flight

Clouds upon clouds of dust enveloping
 The lofty gates of the proud capital
 On on to the south west a living wall
 Ten thousand battle-chariots on the wing

Feathers and jewels flashing through the cloud
 Onwards and then an halt The legions wait
 A hundred li beyond the western gate
 The great walls loom behind them wrapt in cloud.

No further stirs the sullen soldiery
 Naught but the last dread office can avail
 Till she of the dark moth-eyebrows lily pale Shines through tall avenues of spears to die

Upon the ground lie ornaments of gold,
One with the dust, and none to gather them,
Hair-pins of jade and many a costly gem,
Kingfishers' wings and golden birds scarce cold.

The king has sought the darkness of his hands,
Veiling the eyes that looked for help in vain,
And as he turns to gaze upon the slain,
His tears, her blood, are mingled on the sands

Exile

Across great plains of yellow sand,
Where the whistling winds are blown,
Over the cloud-topped mountain peaks,
They wend their way alone.

Few are the pilgrims that attain Mount Omi's heights afar ;
And the bright gleam of their standard grows
Faint as the last pale star.

Dark the Ssüch'uan waters loom, Dark the Ssüch'uan hills,
And day and night the monarch's life
An endless sorrow fills.

The brightness of the foreign moon
Saddens his lonely heart ,
And a sound of a bell in the evening rain Doth rend his soul apart,

Return

The days go by and once again
 Among the shadows of his pain
 He lingers at the well known place
 That holds the memory of her face

But from the clouds of earth that lie
 Beneath the foot of tall Ma-wei
 No signs of her dim form appear
 Only the place of death is here

Statesman's and monarch's eyes have met,
 And royal robes with tears are wet
 Then eastward flies the frantic steed
 As on to the Red Wall they speed

Home

There is the pool, the flowers as of old
 There the hibiscus at the gates of gold
 And there the willows round the palace rise
 In the hibiscus flower he sees her face
 Her eyebrows in the willow he can trace
 And silken pansies thrill him with her eyes

How in this presence should his tears not come,
 In spring amid the bloom of peach and plum,

In autumn rains when the wut'ung leaves must fall ?

South of the western palace many trees
Shower their dead leaves upon the terraces,
And not a hand to stir their crimson pall

Ye minstrels of the Garden of the Pear,¹ Grief with the touch of age has blanched your hair

Ye guardians of the Pepper Chamber,² now
No longer young to him, the firefly flits
Through the black hall where, lost to love, he sits, Folding the veil of sorrows round his brow,

Alone, and one by one the lanterns die,
Sleep with the lily hands has passed him by,
Slowly the watches of the night are gone,
For now, alas ! the nights are all too long,
And shine the stars, a silver, mocking throng,
As though the dawn were dead or slumbered on Cold settles on the painted duck and drake,

The frost a ghostly tapestry doth make,
Chill the kingfisher's quilt with none to share.
Parted by life and death ; the ebb and flow
Of night and day over his spirit go ,
He hunts her face in dreams, and finds despair.

¹ The Pear Garden was a college of music founded by Ming Huang for the purpose of training the youth of both sexes

² The women's part of the palace

Spirit Land

A priest of Tao one of the Hung in school
Was able by his magic to compel
The spirits of the dead. So to relieve The sorrows of his king the man of Too Receives an urgent summons Borne aloft
Upon the clouds on ether charioted
He flies with speed of lightning High to heaven
Low down to earth he seeking everywhere
Floats on the far empyreon and below
The yellow springs but nowhere in great space
Can he find ought of her At length he hears
An old world tale on Island of the Blest¹—
So runs the legend—in mid-ocean lies
In realms of blue vacuity too faint
To be descried there gaily coloured towers
Rise up like rainbow clouds and many gentle
And beautiful Immortals pass their days
In peace Among them there is one whose name Sounds upon lips as Eternal By the bloom
Of her white skin and flower like face he knows
That this is she Knocking at the jado door
At the western gate of the golden house he bids
A fair maid breathe his name to one more fair
Than all She hearing of this omhassy
Sent by the Son of Heaven starts from her dreams
Among the tapestry curtains Gathering

¹ The fabled Island of P'eng-lai.

Her robes around her, letting the pillow fall,
She, risen in haste, begins to deck herself With pearls and gems Her cloud-like hair, dis-hevelled,

Betrays the nearness of her sleep. And with the droop

Of her flowery plumes in disarray, she floats
Light through the hall The sleeves of her divine Raiment the breezes fill As once again
To the Rainbow Skirt and Feather Jacket air
She seems to dance, her face is fixed and calm, Though many tear-drops on an almond bough
Fall, and recall the rains of spring Subdued
Her wild emotions and restrained her grief,
She tenders thanks unto his Majesty,
Saying how since they parted she has missed His form and voice , how, though their love had reached

Too soon its earthly limit, yet among The blest a multitude of mellow noons
Remain ungathered Turning now, she leans
Toward the land of the living, and in vain
Would find the Imperial city, lost in the dust And haze Then raising from their lacquered gloom

Old keepsakes, tokens of undying love,
A golden hair-pin, an enamel brooch,
She bids him bear them to her lord One-half
The hair-pin still she keeps, one-half the brooch, Breaking with her dim hands the yellow gold,

Sundering the enamel "Toll my lord"
She murmured to be firm of heart as this Gold and enamel then in heaven or earth Below we twain may meet once more At parting

She gave a thousand messages of love
Among the rest recalled a mutual pledge
How on the seventh day of the seventh moon
Within the Hall of Immortality
At midnight whispering when none were near Low in her ear he breathed I swear that we Like to the one-winged birds will over fly
Or grow united as the tree whose boughs
Are interwoven. Heaven and earth shall fall
Long lasting as they are But this great wrong
Shall stretch from end to end the universe,
And shine beyond the ruin of the stars

THE RIVER AND THE LEAF

Into the night the sounds of luting flow
The west wind stirs amid the root-crop blue
While envious fireflies spoil the twinkling dew
And early wild-geese stem the dark Kin ho

Now great trees tell their secrets to the sky
And hill on hill looms in the moon-clear night.
I watch one leaf upon the river light
And in a dream go drifting down the Hwai

LAKE SHANG

Oh! she is like a picture in the spring,
This lake of Shang, with the wild hills gathering
Into a winding garden at the base
Of stormless waters, pines, deep blue, enlase
The lessening slopes, and broken moonlight gleams
Across the waves like pearls we thread in dreams
Lake a woof of jasper strands the corn unfolds, Field upon field beyond the quiet wolds,
The late-blown rush flaunts in the dusk serene
Her netted sash and slender skirt of green
Sadly I turn my prow toward the shore,
The dream behind me and the world before.
O Lake of Shang, his feet may wander far Whose soul thou holdest mirrored as a star.

THE RUINED HOME

Who was the far-off founder of the house,
With its red gates abutting to the road?—
A palace, though its outer wings are shorn,
And domes of glittering tiles The wall without Has tottered into ruin, yet remain
The straggling fragments of some seven courts,
The wreck of seven fortunes roof and eaves Still hang together. From this chamber cool

The dense blue smoke arose Nor heat nor cold

Now dwells therein A tall pavilion stands
Empty beside the empty rooms that face
The pine-browed southern hills Long purple vines

Frame the verandahs

Mount the sunken step
Of the red, joyous threshold and shake down
The peach and cherry branches Yonder group
Of scarlet peonies hath ringed about
A lordly fellow with ten witnesses
Of his official rank. The taint of meat Lingers around the kitchen and a trace Of vanished hoards the treasury retains

;

Who can lay hold upon my words ? Give heed And commune with thyself ! How poor and mean

Is the last state of wretchedness, when cold
And famine thunder at the gates and none
But pale endurance on the threshold stands
With helpless hands and hollow eyes the dumb Beholder of calamity O thou
That would protect the land a thousand years
Behold they are not that herein once bloomed
And perished but the garden breathes of them
And all the flowers are fragrant for their sakes Salute the garden that salutes the dead !

A PALACE STORY

A network handkerchief contains no tear
 'Tis dawn at court ere wine and music sate.
 The rich red crops no aftermath await Rest on a screen, and you will fall, I fear.

PEACEFUL OLD AGE

Chuang Tzŭ said "Tao¹ gives me this toil in manhood, this repose in old age, this rest in death "

Swiftly and soon the golden sun goes down,
 The blue sky wells afar into the night
 Tao is the changeful world's environment ;
 Happy are they that in its laws delight

Tao gives me toil, youth's passion to achieve,
 And leisure in life's autumn and decay
 I follow Tao—the seasons are my friends ;
 Opposing it misfortunes come my way.

Within my breast no sorrows can abide ;
 I feel the great world's spirit through me thrill,
 And as a cloud I drift before the wind,
 Or with the random swallow take my will.

¹ Literally, "The Way "

As underneath the mulberry tree I dream
 The water-clock drips on and dawn appears
 A new day shines on wrinkles and white hair
 The symbols of the fulness of my years

If I depart I cast no look behind Still wed to life I still am free from care
 Since life and death in cycles come and go
 Of little moment are the days to spare

Thus strong in faith I wait and long to be One with the pulsings of Eternity

SLEEPLESSNESS

I cannot rest when the cool is gone from June,
 But haunt the dim verandah till the moon
 Fades from the dawn's pursuit
 The stirrup-sires beneath the terrace flare,
 Over the star-domed court a low sad air
 Roams from a hidden lute

This endless heat doth urge me to extremes Yet cool of autumn waits till the wild geese screams

 In the track of whirling skies
 My hand is laid upon the cup once more,
 And of the red-gold vintage I implore
 The sleep that night denies.

THE GRASS

How beautiful and fresh the grass returns !
When golden days decline, the meadow burns ;
Yet autumn suns no hidden root have slain,
The spring winds blow, and there is grass again

Green rioting on olden ways it falls
The blue sky storms the ruined city walls ;
Yet since Wang Sun departed long ago,
When the grass blooms both joy and fear I know.

AUTUMN ACROSS THE FRONTIER

The last red leaves droop sadly o'er the slain ;
In the long tower my cup of wine I drain, Watching the mist-flocks driven through the hills,
And great blown roses ravished by the rain.

The beach tints linger down the frontier line,
And sounding waters shimmer to the brine ;
Over the Yellow Kingdom breaks the sun, Yet dreams, and woodlands, and the chase are mine.

THE FLOWER FAIR

The city walls rise up to greet Spring's luminous twilight hours,
The clamour of carts goes down the street
This is the Fair of Flowers
Leisure and pleasure drift along Beggar and marquis join the throng
And care humility rank and pride
In the sight of the flowers are laid aside Bright oh! bright are a thousand shades, Crimson splashes and slender blades
With five white fillets bound Tents are here that will cover all Ringed with trollys and leafy wall,
And the dust is laid around Naught but life doth here display
The dying flower is cast away
Families meet and intermingle Lovers are parted and friends go single One ambition all avow—
A roof to harbour a field to plough,
See, they come to the Flower Fair
Youth and maiden a laughing pair Bowed and sighing the greybeard wends
Alone to the mart where sighing ends.
For here is a burden all may bear,
The crimson and gold of the Flower Fair

THE PENALTIES OF RANK

Three score and ten ! A slave to office yet !
In the Li Chi these luminous words befall
" The lust for honours honours not at all,"
Here is the golden line we most forget

Alas ! how these long years afflict a man !
When teeth are gone, and failing eyes grow dim.
The morning dews brought dreams of fame to him
Who bears in dusk the burdens of his clan.

His eyes still linger on the tassel blue,
And still the red sedan of rank appeals,
But his shrunk belly scarce the girdle feels As, bowed, he crawls the Prince's Gateway through.

Where is the man that would not wealth acclaim ?
Who would not truckle for his sovereign's grace ?
Yet years of high renown their furrows trace,
And greatness overwhelms the weary frame

The springs of laughter flow not from his heart,
Where bidé the dust and glamour of old days.
Who walks alone in contemplation's ways ?
'Tis he, the happy man, who dwells apart.

THE ISLAND OF PINES

Across the willow lake a temple shines,
Pale, through the lotus-girdled isle of pines,
And twilight listens to the drip of oars—
The coming of dark boats with scented stores
Of orange seed, the mist leans from the hill
While palm leaves sway twixt wind and water chill
And waves of smoke like phantoms rise and fade
Into a trembling tangle of green jade
I dream strange dreams within my tower room Dreams from the glimmering realms of even gloom
Until each princely guest doth landing raise
His eyes upon the full-orbed moon to gaze—
The old moon palace that in ocean stands
Mid clouds of thistle-down and jewelled strands

SPRINTOTIDE

The lonely convent on the hill
Draws merchants faring from the west Almost upon the waters still The quiet clouds lean down and rest

In green pavilions of warm trees
The golden builders toil and sing ;
While swallows dip along the leas,
And dabble in the ooze of Spring

A thousand flowers, a thousand dreams,
Bright pageants in confusion pass
See yonder, where the white horse gleams
His fetlocks deep in phant grass

Beside the eastern lake there calls
No laughing throng, no lover goes ;
But in the long embankment walls
The willow shade invites repose.

THE ANCIENT WIND

The peach blooms open on the eastern wall—
I breathe their fragrance, laughing in the glow
Of golden noontide Suddenly there comes
The revelation of the ancient wind, Flooding my soul with glory , till I feel
One with the brightness of the first far dawn,
One with the many-coloured spring , and all
The secrets of the scented hearts of flowers
Are whispered through me , till I cry aloud — “ Alas ! how grey and scentless is the bloom Of mortal life ! ” This—this alone I fear,

That from yon twinkling mirror of delight
The unreal flowers may fade that with the breath
Of the fiery flying Dragon they will fall
Petal by petal slowly yet too soon
Into the world a green sepulchre Alas !
My little friends my lovers we must part,
And, like some uncompanioned pine that stands,
Last of the legions on the southern slopes
I too shall stand alone and hungry winds
Shall gnaw the lute-strings of my desolate heart

LI HUA

CIRCA A D 850

AN OLD BATTLE-FIELD

VAST, vast—an endless wilderness of sand ;
A stream crawls through its tawny banks , the hills

Encompass it , where in the dismal dusk
Moan the last sighs of sunset Shrubs are gone, Withered the grass , all chill as the white rime
Of early morn The birds go soaring past,
The beasts avoid it , for the legend runs—
Told by the crook'd custodian of the place—
Of some old battle-field “ Here many a time,”
He quavered, “ armies have been overwhelmed,
And the faint voices of the unresting dead
Often upon the darkness of the night Go wailing by.”

O sorrow ! O ye Ch'ins !
Ye Hans ! ye dynasties for ever flown !
Ye empires of the dust ! for I have heard
How, when the Ch'is and Weis embattled rose

Along the frontier when the Chings and Hans Gathered their multitudes a myriad leagues
Of utter weariness they trod. By day
Grazing their jaded steeds by night they ford
The hostile stream The endless earth below,
The boundless sky above they know no day
Of their return. Their breasts are ever bared
To the pitiless steel and all the wounds of war Unspeakable

Methinks I see them now Dust-mantled in the bitter wind a host
 Of Tartar warriors in ambuscade
 Our leader scorns the foe He would give battle
 Upon the threshold of the camp The stream Besets a grim array where order reigns
 Though many hearts may beat where discipline
 Is all, and life of no account

The spear
Now works its iron will, the startled sand Blinding the combatants together looked In the death-grip while hill and vale and stream Glow with the flash and crash of arms Then cold
The shades of night overwhelm them, to the knee
In snow beards stiff with ice The carrion bird Hath sought its nest The war-horse in its strength

Is broken. Clothes avail not. Hands are dead Flesh to the frost succumbs. Nature herself Doth aid the Tartar with a deadly blast
Following the wild onslaught. Wagons block

The way. Our men, beset with flank attacks,
Surrender with their officers Their chief
Is slain The river to its topmost banks
Swollen with death, the dykes of the Great Wall
Brimming with blood. Nation and rank are lost
In that vast-heaped corruption.

Faintly now,
And fainter beats the drum, for strength is shorn,
And arrows spent, and bow-strings snapped, and swords

Shattered The legions fall on one another
In the last surge of life and death. To yield
Is to become a slave, to fight is but
To mingle with the desert sands

No sound
Of bird now flutters from the hushed hillside;
All, all is still, save for the wind that wails
And whistles through the long night where the ghosts

Hither and thither in the gloom go by,
And spirits from the nether world arise
Under the ominous clouds The sunlight pales
Athwart the trampled grass; the fading moon
Still twinkles on the frost-flakes scattered round.

SSÜ K UNG T'U

A.D. 834-908

Little is known of his life, except that he was Secretary to the Board of Rites and retired from this position to lead a contemplative life. His introduction to the European world is entirely due to Professor Giles. No mention is made of him in the French collection of the Tang poets by the Marquis de Saint-Denys. Yet the importance of his work cannot well be over-estimated. He is perhaps the most Chinese of the poets dealt with, and certainly one of the most philosophical. By his subtly simple method of treatment, lofty themes are clothed in the bright raiment of poetry. If through the red pine woods, or amid the torrent of peach blossom rushing down the valley some mortal beauty strays, she is but a symbol, a lure that leads us by way of the particular into the universal. Whatever senses we possess may be used as means of escape from the prison of personality into the boundless freedom of the spiritual world. And once the soul is set free, there is no need for painful aimless wanderings, no need for Mahomet to go to the Mountain, for resting in the centre of all things the universe will be our home and our share in the secrets of the World Builder will be made known.

Freighted with eternal principles
Athwart the night's void,
Where cloud masses darken,
And the wind blows ceaseless around

Beyond the range of conceptions
 Let us gain the Centre,
 And there hold fast without violence,
 Fed from an inexhaustible supply ¹

With such a philosophy there are infinite possibilities. The poet is an occultist in the truest sense of the word. For him, Time and Space no longer exist, and by "concentration" he is able to communicate with the beloved, and

Sweet words falter to and fro—
 Though the great River rolls between

Ssu-K'ung T'u, more than any poet, teaches how unreal are the apparent limitations of man. "He is the peer of heaven and earth", "A co-worker in Divine transformation." With his keen vision the poet sees things in a glance and paints them in a single line, and in the poem as a whole you get the sense of beauty beyond beauty, as though the seer had looked into a world that underlay the world of form. And yet there is nothing strained, no peering through telescopes to find new worlds or magnify the old, the eyes need only be lifted for a moment, and the great power is not the power of sight, but sympathy.

And Nature, ever prodigal to her lovers, repays their favours in full measure. To this old artist-lover she grants no petty details, no chance revelations of this or that sweetness and quality but her whole pure self. Yet such a gift is illimitable, he may only win from secret to secret and die unsatisfied.

You grasp ten thousand, and secure one

This might well be written over his tomb, if any verse were needed to encompass him. By entering into harmony with his environment, Ssu K'ung T'u allowed his splendid vitality to find expression, and after the lapse of a thousand years these glowing pages torn from the book of life have drifted towards us like rose-leaves down a sombre stream.

¹ Chinese Literature, p. 179

RETURN OF SPRING

A lovely maiden roaming
The wild dark valley through Culls from the shining waters
Lilies and lotus blue
With leaves the peach trees are laden
The wind sighs through the haze
And the willows wave their shadows
Down the oriole-haunted ways
As passion tranced I follow,
I hear the old refrain
Of Spring's eternal story
That was old and is young again.

THE COLOUR OF LIFE

Would that we might for ever stay
The rainbow glories of the world
The blue of the unfathomed sea,
The rare azalea late unfurled,
The parrot of a greener spring
The willows and the terrace line,

The stranger from the night-steeped hills,
The roselit brimming cup of wine
Oh for a life that stretched afar,
Where no dead dust of books were rife,
Where spring sang clear from star to star ;
Alas ! what hope for such a life ?

SET FREE

I revel in flowers without let,
An atom at random in space ,
My soul dwells in regions ethereal,
And the world is my dreaming-place.

As the tops of the ocean I tower,
As the winds of the air spreading wide,
I am 'stablished in might and dominion and power,
With the universe ranged at my side

Before me the sun, moon, and stars,
Behind me the phoenix doth clang ,
In the morning I lash my leviathans,
And I bathe my feet in Fusang.

FASCINATION

Fair is the pine grove and the mountain stream
That gathers to the valley far below,

The black winged junks on the dim sea reach, adream,
The pale blue firmament o'er banks of snow
And her more fair more supple smooth than jade Gleaming among the dark red woods I follow
Now lingering now as a bird afraid
Of pirate wings she seeks the haven hollow
Vague and beyond the daylight of recall
Into the cloudland past my spirit flies
As though before the gold of autumn's fall
Before the glow of the moon flooded skies.

TRANQUIL REPOSE

It dwells in the quiet silence
Unseen upon hill and plain
'Tis lapped by the tideless harmonies
It soars with the lonely crane

As the springtime breeze whose flutter
The silken skirts hath blown,
As the wind-drawn note of the bamboo flute
Whose charm we would make our own —

Chance-met, it seems to surrender Sought and it lures us on Ever shifting in form and fantasy,
It eludes us, and is gone

THE POET'S VISION

Wine that recalls the glow of spring,
Upon the thatch a sudden shower,
A gentle scholar in the bower,
Where tall bamboos their shadows fling,
White clouds in heavens newly clear,
And wandering wings through depths of trees,
Then pillowed in green shade, he sees
A torrent foaming to the mere,
Around his dreams the dead leaves fall;
Calm as the starred chrysanthemum,
He notes the season glories come,
And reads the books that never pall.

DESPONDENT

A gale goes ruffling down the stream,
The giants of the forest crack;
My thoughts are bitter—black as death—
For she, my summer, comes not back.

A hundred years like water glide,
Riches and rank are ashen cold,
Daily the dream of peace recedes
By whom shall Sorrow be consoled?

The soldier dauntless draws his sword,
 And there are tears and endless pain
 The winds arise leaves flutter down
 And through the old thatch drips the rain

EMBROIDERIES

If rank and wealth within the mind abide Then gilded dust is all your yellow gold
 Kings in their fretted palaces grow old Youth dwells for ever at Contentment's side
 A misty cloud hanging at the river's brim
 Pink almond flowers along the purple bough
 A hut rose-girdled under moon-swept skies
 A painted bridge half-seen in shadows dim —
 These are the splendours of the poor and thou,
 O wine of spring the vintage of the wise

CONCENTRATION

A hut green-shadowed among firs —
 A sun that alopes in amber air —
 Lone wandering my head I bare
 While some far thrush the silence stirs

No flocks of wild geese thither fly
 And she—ah! she is far away
 Yet all my thoughts behold her stay,
 As in the golden hours gone by \

The clouds scarce dim the water's sheen,
 The moon-bathed islands wanly show,
 And sweet words falter to and fro—
 Though the great River rolls between.

MOTION

Like a water-wheel awhirl,
 Like the rolling of a pearl ;
 Yet these but illustrate,
 To fools, the final state
 The earth's great axis spinning on,
 The never-resting pole of sky—
 Let us resolve their Whence and Why.
 And blend with all things into One ,
 Beyond the bounds of thought and dream,
 Circling the vasty void as spheres
 Whose orbits round a thousand years :
 Behold the Key that fits my theme.

OU YANG HSIU OF LU LING

A.D. 1007-1072

With the completion of the T'ang dynasty it was my design to bring this work to conclusion. I have, however, decided to include Ou Yang Hsiu of the Sung dynasty if only for the sake of his "Autumn," which many competent critics hold to be one of the finest things in Chinese literature. His career was as varied as his talents. In collaboration with the historian Sung Chi he prepared a history of the recent T'ang dynasty. He also held the important post of Grand Examiner and was at one time appointed a Governor in the provinces. It is difficult to praise the "Autumn" too highly. With its daring imagery, grave magnificence of language and solemn thought, it is nothing less than Elizabethan, and only the masters of that age could have done it justice in the rendering.

AUTUMN

One night when dreaming over ancient books,
There came to me a sudden far-off sound
From the south west I listened wondering
As on it crept at first a gentle sigh
Like as a spirit passing then it swelled
Into the roaring of great waves that smite
The broken vanguard of the cliff the rage
Of storm black tigers in the startled night
Among the jackals of the wind and rain.

It burst upon the hanging bell, and set
 The silver pendants chattering It seemed A muffled march of soldiers hurriedly
 Sped to the night attack with muffled mouths,
 When no command is heard, only the tramp
 Of men and horses onward "Boy," said I,
 "Whatsound is that? Go forth and see" My boy, Returning, answered, "Lord! the moon and all
 Her stars shine fair, the silver river spans
 The sky No sound of man is heard without;
 'Tis but a whisper of the trees" "Alas!"
 I cried, "then Autumn is upon us now
 'Tis thus, O boy, that Autumn comes, the cold Pitiless autumn of the wrack and mist,
 Autumn, the season of the cloudless sky,
 Autumn, of biting blasts, the time of blight
 And desolation, following the chill
 Stir of disaster, with a shout it leaps Upon us. All the gorgeous pageantry
 Of green is changed All the proud foliage
 Of the crested forests is shorn, and shrivels down
 Beneath the blade of ice For this is Autumn, Nature's chief executioner It takes The darkness for a symbol. It assumes
 The temper of proven steel Its symbol is A sharpened sword The avenging fiend, it ride
 Upon an atmosphere of death As Spring,
 Mother of many-coloured birth, doth rear
 The young light-hearted world, so Autumn drains
 The nectar of the world's maturity.

And sad the hour when all ripe things must pass
For sweetness and decay are of one stem,
And sweetness ever riots to decay
Still, what availeth it? The trees will fall
In their due season. Sorrow cannot keep The plants from fading Stay! there yet is man—
Man, the divinest of all things whose heart Hath known the shipwreck of a thousand hopes
Who bears a hundred wrinkled tragedies
Upon the parchment of his brow whose soul Strange cares have lined and interlined, until Beneath the burden of life his inmost self Bows down And swifter still he seeks decay
When groping for the unattainable
Or grieving over continents unknown.
Then come the snows of time Are they not due?
Is man of adamant he should outlast
The giants of the grove? Yet after all
Who is it says his strength save man alone?
Tell me O boy by what imagined right Man doth accuse his Autumn blast? My boy Slumbered and answered not. The cricket gave
The only answer to my song of death

AT THE GRAVESIDE

Years since we last foregathered O Man-oh'ing!
Methinks I see thee now
Lord of the noble brow
And courage from thy glances challenging

Ah ! when thy tired limbs were fain to keep The purple cerements of sleep,
 Thy dim beloved form
 Passed from the sunshine warm,
 From the corrupting earth, that sought to hold Its beauty, to the essence of pure gold
 Or haply art thou some far-towering pine,—
 Some rare and wondrous flower ?
 What boots it, this sad hour ?
 Here in thy loneliness the eglantine
 Weaves her sweet tapestries above thy head,
 While blow across thy bed,
 Moist with the dew of heaven, the breezes chill .
 Fire-fly, will-o'-the-wisp, and wandering star Glow in thy gloom, and naught is heard but the far Chanting of woodman and shepherd from the hill, Naught but the startled bird is seen
 Soaring away in the moonland sheen,
 Or the hulk of the scampering beast that fears
 Their plaintive lays as, to and fro,
 The pallid singers go
 Such is thy loneliness. A thousand years, Haply ten thousand, hence the fox shall make His fastness in thy tomb, the weasel take Her young to thy dim sanctuary Such is the lot
 For ever of the great and wise,
 Whose tombs around us rise , (Man honours where the grave remembers not.
 Ah ! that a song could bring Peace to thy dust, Man-ch'ing !

APPENDIX

In the preparation of this little volume I have drawn largely upon the prose translations of the great English and French pioneers in the field of Chinese literature notably Professor Giles and the Marquis d'Hervey Saint-Denys. The copy of the latter's Poésies des Tang which I possess has been at various times the property of William Morris York Powell and John Payne and contains records of all three and pencil notes of illuminating criticism for which I believe the translator of The Arabian Nights is mainly responsible. My thanks are due to Mr Lionel Giles for the translation of Po Chü Fa's "Peaceful Old Age" and for the thorough revision of the Chinese names throughout the book. Mr Walter Old is also responsible for a few of Po Chü Fa's shorter poems here rendered. For the convenience of readers who desire to pursue the subject further I have appended a short list of the very few books obtainable. In this matter Mr A. Probsthain has given me invaluable assistance.

THE ODES

THE KING OF BOOK OF CHINESE POETRY, being the Collection of Ballads, Songs, Hymns, etc., translated by C. E. R. Allen 1891

The best book available on the Odes of Confucius. It contains a complete metrical translation.

THE OLD POETRY CLASSIC OF THE CHINESE a metrical translation by W Jennings with notes 1891

THE ODES OF CONFUCIUS rendered by L Cranmer Byng.

A free metrical rendering in The Wisdom of the East Series

The Chinese Text, with French and Latin translations, by B. Couvreur 1800.

CH'Ü YÜAN

CH'Ü YÜAN'S TSOU-SHI ELEKES OF CH'Ü in stanzas and Hoon, edited by Wang Yi, 2nd Century. In Chinese. A reprint, 1885.

THE SAME—Li Sao. Poème traduit du Chinois par le Marquis d'Hervey Saint-Denys. Paris 1870.

THE SAME—Li Sao. Chinese Text, with English translation and notes by J Legge. London, 1875.

THE T'ANG DYNASTY

CHINESE LITERATURE, by H. A. Giles Short Histories of The Literatures of the World Series, 1901

The standard book, containing a survey of Chinese Literature from the earliest times up to about 1850 Professor Giles devotes considerable space to the poets of the T'ang dynasty, and gives some delightful renderings of the greater poets, such as Li Po and Tu Fu

POÉSIES DE L'ÉPOQUE DES THANG Paris, 1862 By the Marquis d'Hervey-Saint-Denys

A valuable monograph on the poetry of the T'ang period, containing many prose translations and a careful study of Chinese verse form

THE JADE CHAPLET, IN TWENTY-FOUR BEADS A Collection of Songs, Ballads, etc., from the Chinese, by G. C. Stent London, 1874

Contains translations of some of the old Chinese ballads on the subject of the Emperor Ming Huang of the T'ang dynasty The verse is poor in quality but the subject-matter of great interest

POEMS OF THE T'ANG DYNASTY, in Chinese Two volumes

UEBER ZWEI SAMMLUNGEN CHINESISCHER GEDICHTE AUS DER DYNASTIE THANG, von H. Plath Vienna, 1869

BLUTEN CHINESISCHER DICHTUNG, aus der Zeit der Han-sechs Dynastie Magdeburg, 1899

A most valuable book on the subject Contains 21 Chinese illustrations

GENERAL

THE POETRY OF THE CHINESE, by Sir John Davis London, 1870

An interesting essay on Chinese poetry, together with several examples rendered into English verse Owing, however, to the researches of later sinologues, many of his conclusions, especially as regards pronunciation, are out of date

LA POÉSIE CHINOISE, by C. de Harlez Bruxelles, 1892

The best treatise on Chinese poetry that has yet appeared The passage dealing with Chinese style is especially illuminating The whole essay is deserving of a wider circulation

NOTES ON CHINESE LITERATURE, by A. Wylie London, 1867

Contains a vast deal of interesting information on the subject of Chinese literature, and notices of all the important collections of Chinese verse that have been made from the earliest times

THE WISDOM OF THE EAST SERIES

Edited by L. CRANMER BING and Dr S. A. KAPADIA

THE SERIES AND ITS PURPOSE

THIS Series has a definite object. It is, by means of the best Oriental Literature—its wisdom, philosophy, poetry and ideals—to bring together West and East in a spirit of mutual sympathy, goodwill, and understanding. From India, China, Japan, Persia, Arabia, Palestine, and Egypt these words of wisdom have been gathered.

NEW VOLUMES

ANTHOLOGY OF ANCIENT EGYPTIAN POEMS

By C. ELISSA SHARPLEY. 1/6 net.

TIME KUN DAN Prince of Buddhist Benevolence. A

Mystery Play translated from Tibetan Text by MURRAY H. MORRISON.
1/6 net.

LOTUSES OF THE MAHĀYĀNA Edited by KENNETH

SAVONICK, Translator and Editor of The Heart of Buddhism, etc. 2/6 net.

ANCIENT INDIAN FABLES AND STORIES. By

STANLEY RICE. 2/6 net.

VEDIC HYMNS Translated from the Rigveda. By EDWARD

J. THOMAS, M.A., LITT.D. 1/6 net.

INDIAN

HINDU GODS AND HEROES Studies in the History of the Religion of India. By LIONEL D. BARNETT. 2/6 net.

BUDDHIST SCRIPTURES A Selection Translated from the Pali with Introduction by E. J. THOMAS, M.A. 2/6 net.

THE HEART OF INDIA. Sketches in the History of Hindu

Religion and Morals. By L. D. BARNETT, M.A., LITT.D. 1/6 net.

THE RELIGION OF THE SIKHS. By DOROTHY FIELD.

1/6 net.

Continued over

BRAHMA-KNOWLEDGE; An Outline of the Philosophy of the Vedānta. As set forth by the Upanishads and by Sankara. By L. D. BARNETT, M A, Litt D 3/6 net.

THE BUDDHA'S "WAY OF VIRTUE" A Translation of the Dhammapada. By W. C. D. WAGISWARA and K. J. SAUNDERS, Members of the Royal Asiatic Society, Ceylon branch 3/6 net.

LEGENDS OF INDIAN BUDDHISM. Translated from "L'Introduction à l'Histoire du Bouddhisme Indien" of Eugène Burnouf, with an Introduction by WINIFRED STEPHENS 3/6 net.

IRANIAN (Persian, Pehlvi, Zend, etc.)

THE SECRET ROSE GARDEN OF SA'D UD DIN MAHMŪD SHABISTARĪ Rendered from the Persian, with an Introduction, by FLORENCE LEDERER. 3/6 net

THE RUBA'İYĀT OF HĀFIZ Translated with Introduction by SYED ABŪL MAJID, LL.D. Rendered into English Verse by L. CRANMER-BYNG 3/6 net

THE TEACHINGS OF ZOROASTER, and the Philosophy of the Parsi Religion Translated with Introduction by Dr S. A. KAPADIA, Lecturer, University College, London 2nd Edition 3/6 net

THE DIWAN OF ZEB-UN-NISSA The First Fifty Ghazals, Rendered from the Persian by MAGAN LAL and JESSIE DUNCAN WESTBROOK With an Introduction and Notes 3/6 net

THE SPLENDOUR OF GOD Being Extracts from the Sacred Writings of the Bahais With Introduction by ERIC HAMMOND 3/6 net.

THE PERSIAN MYSTICS

I Jalálu'd-din Rumí By F. HADLAND DAVIS 3/6 net.

II Jámí By F. HADLAND DAVIS 3/6 net

SA'DI'S SCROLL OF WISDOM By SHAIKH SA'DI With Introduction by Sir ARTHUR N. WOLLASTON, K.C.I.E. 2/6 net. With Persian Script added 3/6 net.

THE BUSTĀN OF SA'DI From the Persian. Translated with Introduction by A. HART EDWARDS 3/6 net

THE ROSE GARDEN OF SA'DI Selected and Rendered from the Persian with Introduction by L. CRANMER-BYNG 3/6 net

ARABIC

THE RELIGION OF THE KORAN With Introduction by Sir ARTHUR N. WOLLASTON, K.C.I.E. 2/6 net.

THE POEMS OF MU'TAMID, KING OF SEVILLE Rendered into English Verse by DULCIE LAWRENCE SMITH With an Introduction 2/6 net.

ABU'L ALA, THE SYRIAN By HENRY BAERLEIN 3/6 net.

THE ALCHEMY OF HAPPINESS By AL GHAZZALI. Rendered into English by CLAUD FIELD 3/6 net.

THE SINOINO CARAVAN Some Echoes of Arabian Poetry
By HENRY BAEKLIN 2/6 net.

THE DIWAN OF ABUL ALA. By HENRY BAEKLIN
2/6 net.

HEBREW

THE WISDOM OF THE APOCRYPHA. With an Introduction by C. E. LAWRENCE, Author of "Pilgrimage, etc." 2/6 net.

ANCIENT JEWISH PROVERBS Compiled and Classified by A. COHEN, 1st Scholar of Emmanuel College Cambridge. 2/6 net.

CHINESE

THE RHYTHM OF LIFE. Based on the Philosophy of Lao-Tse. By HENRI BOUILLON. Translated by M. E. RETZELER. 2/6 net.

A FEAST OF LANTERNS Rendered with an Introduction by L. CRAWFORD-BYRON, Author of "A Lute of Jade, The Odes of Confucius, etc." 2/6 net.

TAOIST TEACHINGS. From the Mystical Philosophy of Lieh Tse. Translated by LEON L. GILES, M.A. 2/6 net.

A LUTE OF JADE Being Selections from the Classical Poets of China. Rendered with an Introduction by L. CRAWFORD-BYRON, and Edition. 2/6 net.

THE CLASSICS OF CONFUCIUS.

The Book of History (Shu-King).

By W. GOMM OLM. 2/6 net.

The Book of Odes (Shi-King).

By L. CRAWFORD-BYRON. 2/6 net.

THE SAYINGS OF CONFUCIUS. A new Translation of the greater part of the Confucian Analects, with Introduction and Notes by LEON L. GILES, M.A. (Oxon.), Assistant in the Department of Oriental Book and Manuscripts of the British Museum. 2/6 net.

THE CONDUCT OF LIFE; or The Universal Order of Confucius. A translation of one of the four Confucian Books, hitherto known as the Doctrine of the Mean. By KU HUNG-MING, M.A. (Edin.). 2/6 net.

THE SAYINGS OF LAO TZŪ From the Chinese. Translated with Introduction by LEON L. GILES, British Museum. 2/6 net.

MUSINGS OF A CHINESE MYSTIC. Selections from the Philosophy of Chuang Tse. With Introduction by LEON L. GILES, M.A. (Oxon.), Assistant at the British Museum. 2/6 net.

THE FLIGHT OF THE DRAGON An Essay on the Theory and Practice of Art in China and Japan, based on Original Sources. By LAWRENCE BINYON. 2/6 net.

YANO CHU SHI GARDEN OF PLEASURE. Translated from the Chinese by Professor ANTON F. REE. With an Introduction by H. CRAWFORD-BYRON. 2/6 net.

THE BOOK OF FILIAL DUTY Translated from the Chinese of the Hsiao Ching by IVAN CHEN First Secretary to the Chinese Legation. 2/6 net.

JAPANESE

- BUDDHIST PSALMS Translated from the Japanese of Shinran Shōnin by S. YAMANE and L. ADAM BECK. 3/6 net.
SPIRIT OF JAPANESE POETRY By YONE NOGUCHI. 3/6 net.
SPIRIT OF JAPANESE ART By YONE NOGUCHI. 3/6 net.
THE WAY OF CONTENTMENT Translated from the Japanese of Kaibara Ekken by KEN HOSHINO. 3/6 net.
THE MASTER-SINGERS OF JAPAN Being Verse Translations from the Japanese Poets. By CLARA A. WALSH. 3/6 net.
WOMEN AND WISDOM OF JAPAN. With Introduction by S. TAKAISHI. 2/6 net.

EGYPTIAN

- ANCIENT EGYPTIAN LEGENDS By M. A. MURRAY. 3/6 net.
THE INSTRUCTION OF PTAH-HOTEP AND THE INSTRUCTION OF KE'GEMNI The Oldest Books in the World. Translated from the Egyptian with Introduction and Appendix by BATTISCOMBE GUNN. 2/6 net.
THE BURDEN OF ISIS Being the Laments of Isis and Nephthys. Translated from the Egyptian with an Introduction by JAMES TEACKLE DENNIS. 2/6 net.

Editorial Communications should be addressed to

THE EDITORS OF THE WISDOM OF THE EAST SERIES, 50A, ALBEMARLE STREET, LONDON, W 1.

SALMA

A PLAY IN THREE ACTS

By L. CRANMER-BYNG

3s 6d net

THIS is the drama of April played in Cintra one thousand years ago. With sunshine and laughter and the whispering of a name among the lemon groves the brief day passes, and with tears it fades into the Lusitanian twilight.

LONDON: JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET, W 1.

The way. Our men, beset with flank attacks,
Surrender with their officers Their chief
Is slain The river to its topmost banks
Swollen with death, the dykes of the Great Wall
Brimming with blood Nation and rank are lost
In that vast-heaped corruption.

Faintly now,
And fainter beats the drum, for strength is shorn,
And arrows spent, and bow-strings snapped, and swords

Shattered The legions fall on one another
In the last surge of life and death To yield
Is to become a slave, to fight is but
To mingle with the desert sands

No sound
Of bird now flutters from the hushed hillside;
All, all is still, save for the wind that wails
And whistles through the long night where the ghosts

Hither and thither in the gloom go by,
And spirits from the nether world arise
Under the ominous clouds The sunlight pales
Athwart the trampled grass; the fading moon
Still twinkles on the frost-flakes scattered round.

SSŪ K'UNG T'U

A.D. 834-908

Little is known of his life, except that he was Secretary to the Board of Rites and retired from this position to lead the contemplative life. His introduction to the European world is entirely due to Professor Giles. No mention is made of him in the French collection of the T'ang poets by the Marquis de Saint-Denys. Yet the importance of his work cannot well be over-estimated. He is perhaps the most Chinese of the poets dealt with, and certainly one of the most philosophical. By his subtly simple method of treatment, lofty themes are clothed in the bright raiment of poetry. If through the red pine woods, or amid the torrent of peach-blossom rushing down the valley some mortal beauty strays, she is but a symbol, a lure that leads us by way of the particular into the universal. Whatever senses we possess may be used as means of escape from the prison of personality into the boundless freedom of the spiritual world. And once the soul is set free, there is no need for painful aimless wanderings, no need for Mahomet to go to the Mountain, for resting in the centre of all things the universe will be our home and our share in the secrets of the World Builder will be made known.

Freighted with eternal principles
Athwart the night's void,
Where cloud masses darken,
And the wind blows ceaseless around,